

Vol. I.

Complete In One Number.

Beadle & Adams, Publishers,
No. 98 WILLIAM STREET, NEW YORK.

Price, Ten Cents. No. 9.

Handy Andy.

BY SAMUEL LOVER.

CHAPTER I.

ANDY ROONEY was a fellow who had the most singurly ingenious knack of doing everything the wrong larly ingenious knack of doing everything the wrong way; disappointment waited on all affairs in which he bore a part, and destruction was at his fingers' ends; so the nickname the neighbors stuck upon him was Handy Andy, and the jeering jingle pleased them.

Andy's entrance into this world was quite in character with his after achievements, for he was nearly the death of his mother. She survived, however, to have herself clawed almost to death while her darling "babby" was in arms, for he would not take his nourishment from the parent fount unless he had one of his little red fists twisted into his mother's hair, which he dragged till he made her roar; while he diverted the pain by scratching her, till the blood came, with the other. Nevertheless, she swore he was "the loveliest and sweetest craythur the sun iver shined upon;" and when he was able to run about and wield a little stick, and smash everything breakable belonging to her, she only praised his precocious powers, and she used to ask, "Did ever any one see a darlin' of his age handle a stick so bowld as

Andy grew up in mischief and the admiration of his mammy; but, to do him justice, he never meant harm in the course of his life, and he was most anxious to offer his services on all occasions to those who would accept them; but they were only the persons who had not already proved Andy's peculiar

There was a farmer hard by in this happy state of ignorance, named Owen Doyle, or, as he was familiarly called, Owny na Coppal, or, "Owen of the Horses," because he bred many of these animals, and sold them at the neighboring fairs; and Andy one day offered his services to Owny when he was in want of some one to drive up a horse to his house from a distant "bottom," as low grounds by a riverside are called in Ireland.

"Oh, he's wild, Andy, and you'd never be able to ketch him," said Owny.

"Troth, an' I'll engage I'll ketch him if you'll let me go. I never seen the horse I couldn't ketch, sir," said Andy.

"Why, you little spridhogue, if he took to runnin' over the long bottom, it 'ud be more than a day's work for you to folly him."

"Oh, but he won't run."
"Why won't he run?"
"Bekase I won't make him run."
"How can you help it?"

"I'll soother him."
"Well, you're a willin' brat, anyhow; and so go on, and God speed you!" said Owny.

"Just g? me a wisp o' hay an' a' han'ful iv oats," aid Andy, "if I should have to coax him."
"Sartinly," said Owny, who entered the stable and came forth with the articles required by Andy, and a halter for the horse also.

"Now take care," said Owny, "that you are able to ride that horse if you get on him."

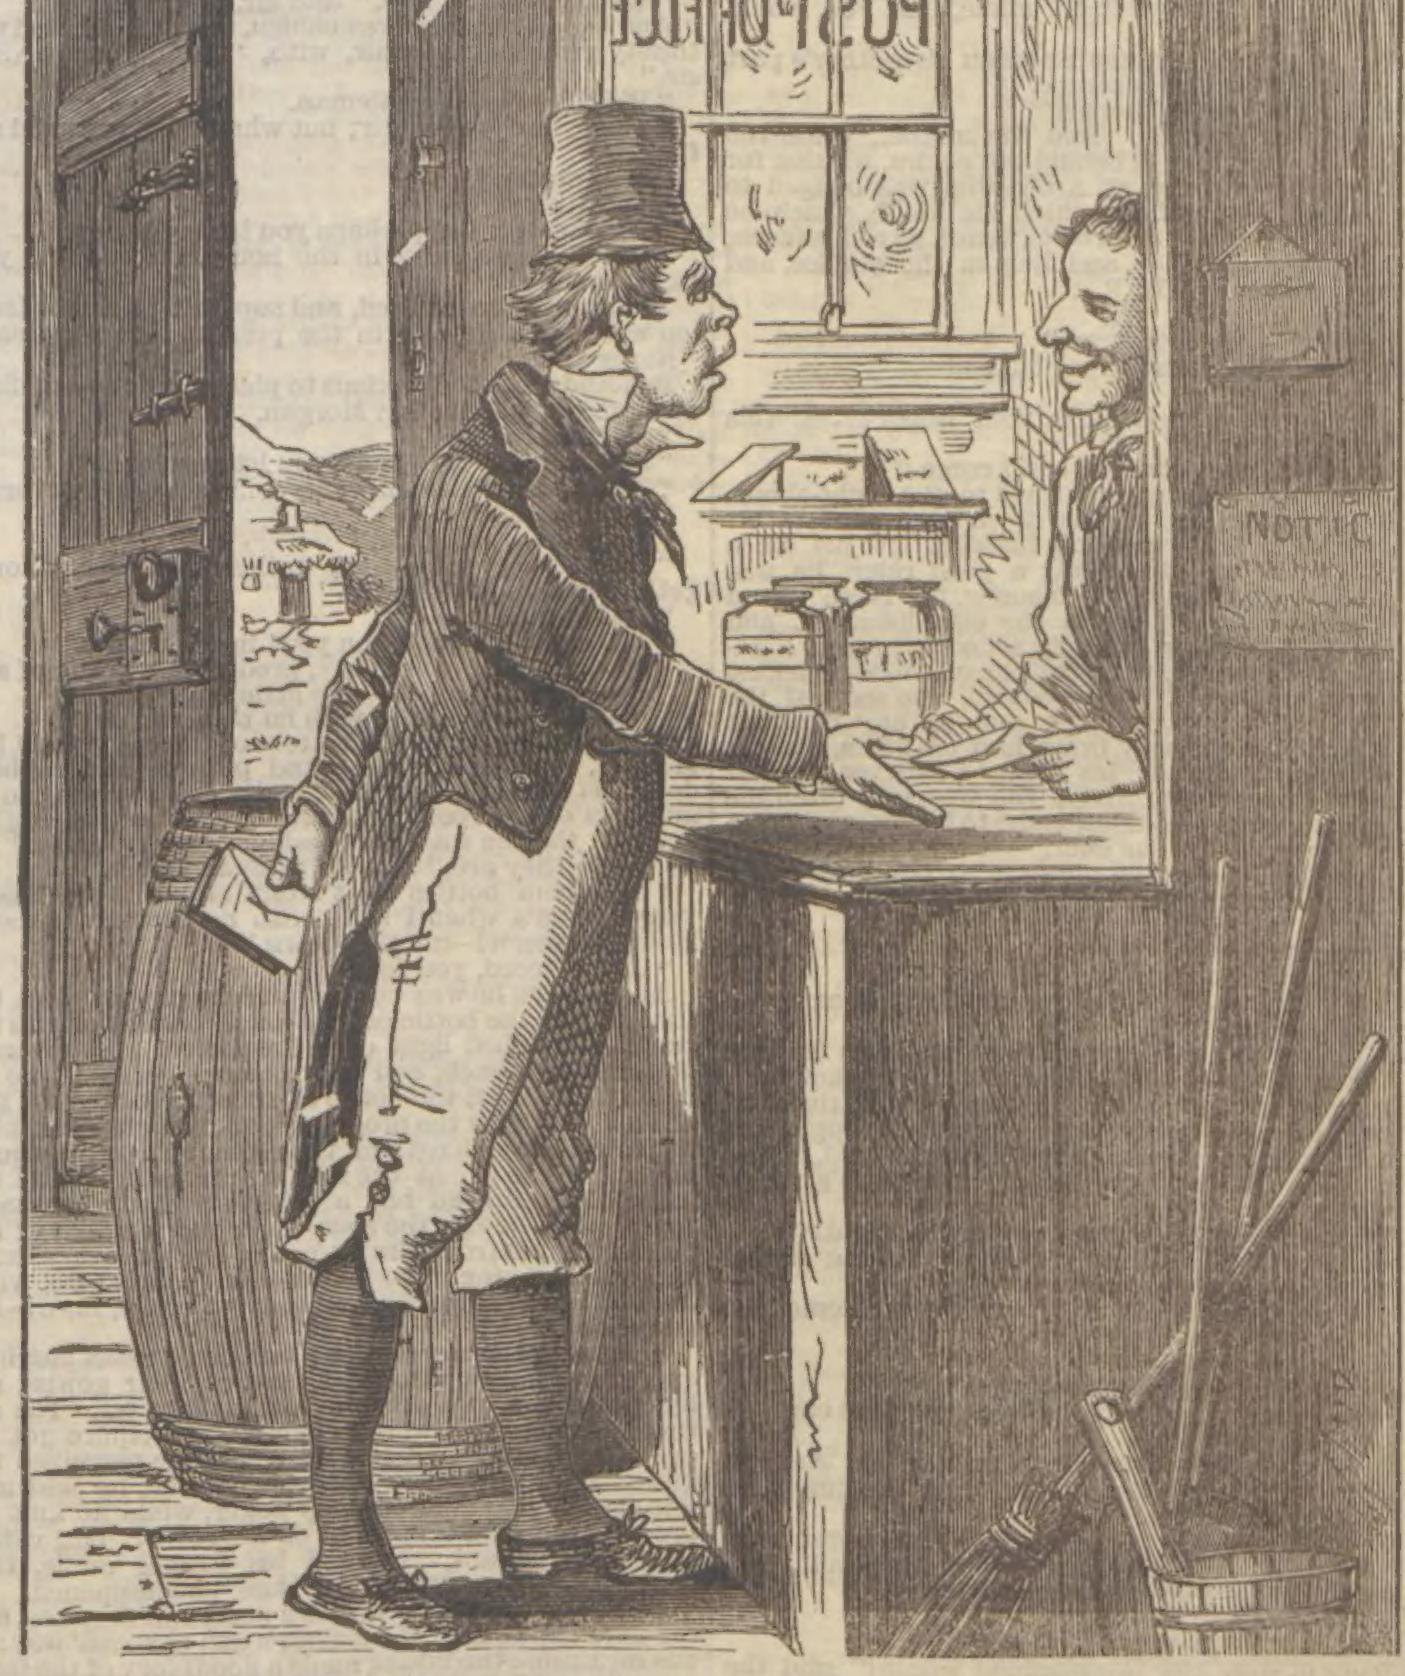

"Oh, never fear, sir. I can ride owld Lanty Gubbins' mule betther nor any o' the boys on the common, and he couldn't throw me th' other day, though he kicked the shoes av him."

"After that you may ride anything," said Owny; and indeed it was true; for Lanty's mule, which fed on the common, being ridden slyly by all the young vagabonds in the neighborhood, had become such an adept in the art of getting rid of his troublesome customers that it might well be considered a feat to stick on him.

"Now, take great care of him, Andy, my boy, said

"Don't be afeared, sir," said Andy, who started on his errand in that peculiar pace which is elegantly called a "sweep's trot;" and as the river lay between Owny Doyle's and the bottom, and was too deep for Andy to ford at that season, he went round by Dinny Dowling's mill, where a small wooden

Here he thought he might as well secure the assistance of Paudeen, the miller's son, to help him in catching the horse; so he looked about the place until he found him, and telling him the errand on which he was going, said, "If you like to come wid me, we can both have a ride." This was temptation sufficient for Paudeen, and the boys proceeded together to the bottom, and they were not long in securing the hors."

over his head, "Now," said Andy, "give me a lift on him;" and accordingly, by Paudeen's catching Andy's left foot in both his hands clasped together in the fashion of a stirrup, he hoisted his friend on the horse's back; and as soon as he was secure there, Master Paudeen, by the aid of Andy's hand, contrived to scramble up after him; upon which Andy applied his heel to the horse's side with many vigorous kicks, and crying "hurrup!" at the same time, endeavored to stimulate Owny's steed into something of a pace as he turned his head toward the mill.

"Sure arn't you going to crass the river?" said Paudeen.

"Yes, but I don't like."

"No; I'm going to l'ave you at home."
"Oh, I'd rather go up to Owny's, and it's the shortest way acrass the river."

"Is it afeared that you are?" said Paudeen.
"Not I, indeed!" said Andy, though it was really the fact, for the width of the stream startled him,
"but Owny told me to take grate care o' the baste, and I'm loath to wet his feet."
"Go 'long wid you, you fool! what harm would it do him? Sure he's neither sugar nor salt that he'd melt."

"Well, I won't, anyhow," said Andy, who by this time had got the horse into a good high trot, that shook every word of argument out of Paudeen's body; besides, it was as much as the boys could do to keep their seats on Owny's Bucephalus, who was not long in reaching the miller's bridge. Here voice and halter were employed to pull him in, that he might cross the narrow wooden structure at a quiet pace. But whether his double load had given him the idea of double exertion, or that the pair of legs on each side sticking into his flanks (and perhaps the horse was ticklish) made him go the faster, we know not: but the horse charged the bridge as if an Enniskilliner were on his back, and an enemy before him: and in two minutes his hoofs clattered like thunder on the bridge, that did not bend beneath him. No. it did not bend, but it broke; proving the falsehood of the boast, "I may break, but I won't bend;" for, after all, the really strong may bend, and be as strong as ever: it is the unsound that has only the seeming of strength, which breaks at last when it resists too long.

Surprising was the spin the young equestrians took over the ears of the horse, enough to make all the artists of Astley's envious; and plump they went into the river, where each formed his own ring, and executed some comical "scenes in the circle," which were suddenly changed to evolutions on the "flying cord" that Dinny Dowling threw to the performers, which became suddenly converted into a "tight rope," as he dragged the voltigeurs out of the water; and for fear their blood might be chilled by the accident, he gave them an enormous thrashing with a dry end of the rope, just to restore circulation; and his exertions, had they been witnessed, would have charmed the Humane Society.

As for the horse, his legs stuck through the bridge, as though he had been put in a chiroplast, and he went playing away on the water with considerable execution, as if he were accompanying himself in the song which he was squealing at the top of his voice. Half the saws, hatchets, ropes, and poles in the parish were put in requisition immediately, and the horse's first lesson in chiroplastic exercise was performed with no other oss than some skin and a good deal of hair. Of course Andy did not venture on taking Owny's horse home; so the miller sent him to his owner, with an account of the accident. Andy for years kept out of Owny na Coppal's way; and at any time that his presence was troublesome, the inconvenienced party had only to say, "Isn't that Owny na Coppal coming this way?" and Andy fled for his life.

When Andy grew up to be what in country parlance is called "a brave lump of a boy," his mother thought he was old enough to do something for himself; so she took him one day along with her to the squire's, and waited outside the door, loitering up and down the yard behind the house, among a crowd of beggars and great lazy dogs, that were thrusting their heads into every iron pot that stood outside the kitchen door, until chance might give her "a sight o' the squire afore he wint out, or afore he wint in;" and after spending her entire day in this idle way, at last the squire made his appearance, and Judy presented her son, who kept scraping his foot, and pulling his forelock, that stuck out like a piece of ragged thatch from his forehead, making his obeisance to the squire, while his mother was sounding his praises for being the "handiest craythur alive-and so willin'-nothing comes wrong to him." "I suppose the English of all this is, you want me to take him?" said the squire.

"Troth, an' your honor, that's just it-if your honor would be plazed."

"What can he do?" "Anything, your honor."

"That means nothing, I suppose," said the squire. "Oh, no, sir. Everything, I mane, that you would desire him to do." To every one of these assurances on his mother's part

Andy made a bow and a scrape. "Can be take care of horses?"

"The best of care, sir," said the mother, while the miller, who was standing behind the squire, waiting for orders, made a grimace at Andy, who was obliged to cram his face into his hat to hide the laugh, which he could hardly smother, from being heard, as well as seen.

"Let him come, then, and help in the stables, and we'll see what we can do." "May the Lord-"

"That'll do-there, now, go."

"Oh, sure, but I'll pray for you, and-" "Will you go?"

"And may the angels make your honor's bed this blessed night, I pray. "If you don't go your sen shan't come."

Judy and her hopeful boy turned to the right-about, double-quick time, and hurried down the avenue.

The next day Andy was duly installed into his office of stable-helper, and, as he was a good rider, he was soon made whipper-in to the hounds, for there was a want of such a functionary in the establishment, and Andy's boldness in this capacity soon made him a favorite with the squire, who was one of those rollicking boys on the pattern of the old school, who scorned the attentions of a regular valet, and let any one that chance threw in his way bring him his boots, his hot water for shaving, or his coat, whenever it was brushed One morning Andy, who was very often the attendant on such occasions, came to his room with hot water. He tapped at the door,

"Who's that?" said the squire, who had just risen, and did not know but it might be one of the women servants.

"It's me, sir." "Oh-Andy! Come in."

"Here's the hot water, sir," said Andy, bearing an enormous tin can. "Why, what the d-l brings that enormous tin can here? You might as well bring the stable bucket."

"I beg your pardon, sir," said Andy, retreating. In two minutes more Andy came back, and, tapping at the door, put in his head cautiously, and said, "The maids in the kitchen, your honor, says there's not so much hot water ready.' "Did I not see it a moment since in your hand?"

"Yes, sir; but that's not nigh the full o' the stable-

"Go along, you stupid thief, and get me some hot water directly l"

"Will the can do, sir?"

"Ay, anything, so you make haste."

Off posted Andy, and back he came with the can. "Where'll I put it, sir?"

"Throw this out," said the squire, handing Andy a jug containing some cold water, meaning the jug to be replenished with the hot.

Andy took the jug, and the window of the room being open, he very deliberately threw the jug out. The squire stared with wonder, and at last said-

"What did you do that for?"

"Sure you tould me to throw it out, sir." "Go out of this, you thick-headed villain!" said the squire, throwing his boots at Andy's head, along with some very neat curses. Andy retreated, and thought himself a very ill-used person.

Though Andy's regular business was "whipper in," yethe was liable to be called on for the performance of various other duties: he sometimes attended table when the number of guests required that all the subs should be put in requisition, or rode on some distant errand for the "mistress," or drove out the nurse and children on the jaunting-car; and many were the mistakes, delays, or accidents arising from Handy Andy's interference in such matters; but as they were seldom serious and generally laughable, they never cost him the loss of his place, or the squire's favor, who rather enjoyed Andy's blunders.

The first time Andy was admitted into the mysteries of the dining-room great was his wonder. The butler took him in to give him some previous instructions, and Andy was so lost in admiration at the sight of the assembled glass and plate that he stood with his mouth and eyes wide open, and scarcely heard a word that was said to him. After the head man had been dinning his instructions into him for some time he said he might go until his attendance was required. But Andy moved not; he stood with his eyes fixed, by a sort of fascination, on some object that seemed to rivet them with the same unaccountable influence which the rattlesnake exercises over its victim.

"What are you looking at " said the butler.

"Them things, sir," said Andy, pointing to some silver forks.

"Is it the forks?" said the butler. "Oh, no, sir! I know what forks is very well; but I never seen them things afore."

"What things do you mean?" "These things, sir," said Andy, taking up one of the silver forks, and turning it round and round in his hand in utter astonishment, while the butler grinned at his ignorance, and enjoyed his own superior knowledge.

"Well," said Andy, after a long pause, "the devil be from me if ever I seen a silver spoon split that way before!"

The butler gave a horse laugh, and made a standing joke of Andy's split spoon; but time and experience made Andy less impressed with wonder at the show of plate and glass, and the split spoons became familiar as "household words" to him; yet still there were things in the duties of table attendance beyond Andy's comprehension-he used to hand cold plates for fish, and hot plates for jelly, etc. But "one day," as Zanga says-"one day" he was thrown off his center in a remarkable degree by a bottle of soda-water. It was when that combustible was first introduced into Ireland as a dinner beverage that the occurrence took place, and Andy had the luck to be the person to whom a gentleman applied for some soda-water.

"Sir?" said Andy. "Soda-water," said the guest, in that subdued tone in which people are apt to name their wants at the dinner-table.

Andy went to the butler. "Mr. Morgan, there's a gintleman-

"Let me alone, will you?" said Mr. Morgan. Andy maneuvered round him a little longer, and again essayed to be heard. "Mr. Morgan!"

"Don't you see I'm as busy as I can be? Can't you do it yourself?"

"I dunna what he wants."

"Well, go and ax him," said Mr. Morgan. Andy went off as he was bidden, and came behind the thirsty gentleman's chair, with, "I beg your pardon,

"Well!" said the gentleman. "I beg your pardon, sir; but what's this you axed me

"Soda-water." "What, sir?"

"Soda-water: but perhaps you have not any." "Oh, there's plenty in the house, sir! Would you like it hot, sir?"

The gentleman laughed, and supposing the new fashion was not understood in the present company, said, "Never mind."

But Andy was too anxious to please to be so satisfied, and again applied to Mr. Morgan. "Sir," said he.

"Bad luck to you!-can't you let me alone?"

"There's a gentleman wants some soap and wather." "Some what?" "Soap and wather, sir."

"Divil sweep you!-soda wather you mane. You'll get it under the side-board." "Is it in the can sir?"

"The curse o' Crum'll on you! in the bottles." "Is this it, sir?" said Andy, producing a bottle of ale. "No, bad cess to you!—the little bottles." "Is it the little bottles with no bottoms, sir?"

"I wish you wor in the bottom o' the say!" said Mr. Morgan, who was furning and puffing, and rubbing down his face with a napkin, as he was hurrying to all quarters of the room, or, as Andy said, in praising his activity, that he was "like bad luck-everywhere." "There they are," said Mr. Morgan at last.

"Oh, them bottles that won't stand," said Andy; "sure them's what I said, with no bottoms to them. How'll I open it?-it's tied down."

"Cut the cord, you fool!" Andy did as he was desired, and he happened at the time to hold the bottle of soda-water on a level with the cision, bang went the bottle of soda, knocking out two give no more than the fourpence. of the lights with the projected cork, which performing its parabola the length of the room, struck the squire himself in the eye at the foot of the table: while the hostess at the head had a cold bath down her back. Andy, when he saw the soda-water jumping out of the bottle, held it from him at arm's length, every fizz it made, exclaiming, "Ow!-ow!-ow!" And at last when the bottle was empty, he roared out, "Ob, Lord !- it's all gone!"

Great was the commotion; few could resist laughter except the ladies, who all looked at their gowns, not liking the mixture of satin and soda-water. The extinguished candles were relighted—the squire got his eye open again—and the next time he perceived the butler sufficiently near to speak to him, he said in a low and hurried tone of deep anger, while he knit his brow, "Send that fellow out of the room!" but, within the same instant, resumed his former smile, that beamed on all around as if nothing had happened.

Andy was expelled the salle a manger in disgrace, and for days kept out of the master's and misrtess' way: in the meantime the butler made a good story of the thing in the servants' hall; and, when he held up Andy's ignorance to ridicule, by telling how he asked for "soap and water," Andy was given the name of "Suds," and was called by no other for months after.

But, though Andy's functions in the interior were suspended, his services in out-of-door affairs were occasionally put in requisition. But here his evil genius still haunted him, and he put his foot in a piece of business his master sent him upon one day, which was so simple as to defy almost the chance of Andy making any mistake about it; but Andy was very ingenious in his own particular line.

"Ride into the town and see if there's a letter for me," said the squire one day to our hero "Yes, sir."

"You know where to go?" "To the town, sir."

"But do you know where to go in the town?"

"No, sir." "And why don't you ask, you stupid thief?" "Sure I'd find out, sir."

"Didn't I often tell you to ask what you're to do, when you don't know?" "Yes, sir,"

"And why don't you?" "I don't like to be throublesome, sir."

"Confound you!" said the squire; though he could not help laughing at Andy's excuse for remaining in ignorance.

"Well," continued he, "go to the post office. You know the post-office, I suppose?"

"Yes, sir, where they sell gunpowder." "You're right for once," said the squire; for his majesty's postmaster was the person who had the privilege of dealing in the aforesaid combustible. "Go then to the post-office, and ask for a letter for me. Remem ber-not gunpowder, but a letter."

"Yis, sir," said Andy, who got astride of his hack, and trotted away to the post-office. On arriving at the shop of the postmaster (for that person carried on a brisk trade in groceries, gimlets, broadcloth, and linendrapery,) Andy presented himself at the counter, and said, "I want a letther, sir, if you plaze."

"Who do you want it for?" said the postmaster, in a tone which Andy considered an aggression upon the sacredness of private life: so Andy thought the coolest contempt he could throw upon the prying impertinence of the postmaster was to repeat his question.

"I want a letther, sir, if you plaze." "And who do you want it for?" repeated the post

"What's that to you?" said Andy. The postmaster, laughing at his simplicity, told him he could not tell what letter to give him unless he tole him the direction. "The directions I got was to get a letther here—that's the directions." "Who gave you those directions."

"The masther." "And who's your master?"

"What consarn is that o' yours?"

"Why you stupid rascall if you don't tell me his name, how can I give you a letter?" "You could give it if you liked: but you're fond of axin' impident questions, bekase you think I'm simple." "Go along out o' this! Your master must be ar great a goose as yourself, to send such a messenger." "Bad luck to your impidence," said Andy; "is it Squire Egan you dare to say goose to?"

'Oh, Squire Egan's your master, then?" "Yes, have you anything to say ag'in' it?" "Only that I never saw you before."

"Faith, then you'll never see me ag'in if I have my own consint,"

"I won't give you any letter for the squire, unless I know you're his servant. Is there any one in the town

"Plenty," said Andy, "it's not every one is as ignorant as you.'

Just at this moment a person to whom Andy was known entered the house, who vouched to the postmaster that he might give Andy the squire's letter "Have you one for me?" "Yes, sir," said the postmaster, producing one-fourpence."

The gentleman paid the fourpence postage, and left the shop with his letter.

"Here's a letter for the squire," said the postmaster; "you've to pay me elevenpence postage." "What 'ud I pay elevenpence for?"

"For postage." "To the devil wid you! Didn't I see you give Mr Durfy a letther for fourpence this minit, and a bigget letther than this? and now you want me to pay elevenpence for this scrap of a thing. Do you think I'm a fool?" "No; but I'm sure of it," said the postmaster. "Well, you're welkum to be sure, sure; -but don't be delayin' me now; here's fourpence for you, and gi' me the letther."

"Go along, you stupid thief!" said the postmaster, taking up the letter, and going to serve a customer with a mouse-trap.

While this person and many others were served. Andy lounged up and down the shop, every now and then putting in his head in the middle of the customers. and saying, "Will you gi' me the letther?"

He waited for above half an hour, in defiance of the anathemas of the postmaster, and at last left, when he found it impossible to get common justice for his mascandles that shed light over the festive board from a ter, which he thought he deserved as well as another large silver branch, and the moment he made the in- man; for, under this impression, Andy determined to

The squire in the meantime was getting impatient for his return, and when Andy made his appearance, asked if there was a letter for him.

"There is, sir," said Andy. "Then give it to me." "I haven't it, sir."

"What do you mean?" "He wouldn't give it to me, sir." "Who wouldn't give it you?"

"That owld chate beyant in the town-wanting to charge double for it." "Maybe it's a double letter. Why the devil didn't you pay what he asked, sir?" Arrah, sir, why would I let you be chated? It's not a double letther at all: not above half the size o' one Mr. Durfy got before my face for fourpence."

"You'll provoke me to break your neck some day, you vagabond! Ride back for your life, you omadhaun; and pay whatever he asks, and get me the let-

"Why, sir, I tell you he was sellin' them before my face for fourpence apiece." "Go back, you scoundrel! or I'll horsewhip you; and if you're longer than an hour, I'll have you ducked in the horse-pond!" Andy vanished, and made a second visit to the postoffice. When he arrived, two other persons were getting letters, and the postmaster was selecting the epistles for each, from a large parcel that lay before him on the counter; at the same time many shop customers were waiting to be served.

"I'm come for that letther," said Andy. "I'll attend to you by-and-by."

"The masther's in a hurry." "Let him wait till his hurry's over." "He'll murther me if I'm not back soon." "I'm glad to hear it."

While the postmaster went on with such provoking answers to these appeals for dispatch, Andy's eye caught the heap of letters which lay on the counter: so while certain weighing of soap and tobacco was going forward, he contrived to become possessed of two letters from the heap, and, having effected that, waited patiently enough till it was the great man's pleasure to give him the missive directed to his master.

Then did Andy bestride his back, and in triumph at his trick on the postmaster, rattled along the road homeward as fast as the beast could carry him. He came into the squire's presence, his face beaming with delight, and an air of self-satisfied superiority in his manner, quite unaccountable to his master, until be pulled forth his hand, which had been grubbing up his prizes from the bottom of his pocket; and holding three letters over his head, while he said, "Look at that!" he next slapped them down under his broad fist on the table before the squire, saying:

"Well! if he did make me pay elevenpence, by gor, I brought your honor the worth o' your money, anyhow!"

CHAPTER IL

Anny walked out of the room with an air of supreme triumph, having laid the letters on the table, and left the squire staring after him in perfect amazement.

cenius I ever came across," was the soliloquy the master uttered as the servant closed the door after him; it's about." and the squire broke the seal of the letter that Andy's blundering had so long delayed. It was from his lawagent on the subject of an expected election in the county, which would occur in case of the demise of the then sitting member; it ran thus:

"DUBLIN, THURSDAY. "My DEAR SQUIRE-I am making all possible exertions to have every and the earliest information on the subject of the election. I say the election,-because, though the seat of the county is not yet vacant, it is impossible but that it must soon be so. Any other man than the present nember must have died long ago; but Sir Timothy Trim-mer has been so undecided all his life that he cannot at present make up his mind to die; and it is only by Death nimself giving the casting vote that the question can be decided. The writ for the vacant county is expected to arrive by every mail, and in the meantime I am on the alert for information. You know we are sure of the barony of Ballysloughgutthery, and the boys of Killanmaul will murder any one that dares to give a vote against you. We are sure of Knockdoughty also, and the very pigs in Glanamuck would return you; but I must put you on your guard on one point where you least expect to be betrayed. You told me you were sure of Neck-or-nothing Hall; but I can tell you you're out there; for the master of the aforesaid is working heaven, earth, ocean, and all the little dshes, in the other interest; for he is so over head and ears in debt, that he is looking out for a pension, and hopes to get one by giving his interest to the Honorable Sackville Scatterbrain, who sits for the Borough of Old Gooseberry at present, but whose friends think his talents are worthy of a county. If Sack wins, Neck-or-nothing gets a pension -that's poz. I had it from the best authority. I fodge at a milliner's here:-no matter; more when I see you. But don't be afraid; we'll bag Sack, and distance Neck-ornothing. But, seriously speaking, it's too good a joke that O'Grady should use you in this manner, who have been so kind to him in money matters; but, as the old song says, 'Poverty parts good company;' and he is so cursed poor that he can't afford to know you any longer, now that you have lent him all the money you had, and the pension in prospectu is too much for his feelings. I'll be down with you again as soon as I can, for I hate the diabolical town as I do poison. They have altered Stephen's Greenruined it I should say. They have taken away the big ditch that was round it, where I used to hunt water-rats when a boy. They are destroying the place with their | ingenious individual made his appearance, the squire d-d improvements. All the dogs are well, I hope, and my avorite bitch. Remember me to Mrs. Egan, whom all admire.

"My dear squire, yours per quire,
"MURTOUGH MURPHY. "To Edward Egan, Esq., Merryvale."

Murtough Murphy was a great character, as may be guessed from his letter. He was a country attorney of good practice; good, because he could not help it-for he was a clever, ready-witted fellow, up to all sorts of traps, and one in whose hands a cause was very safe; therefore he had plenty of clients without his seeking | money." them. For if Murtough's practice had depended on his looking for it, he might have made broth of his own parchment: for though to all intents and purposes a good attorney, he was so full of fun and fond of amusement, that it was only by dint of the business being thrust upon him he was so extensive a prac-:itioner. He loved a good bottle, a good hunt, a good joke, and a good song, as well as any fellow in Ireland; and even when he was obliged in the way of business to press a gentleman hard—to hunt his man to death he did it so good-humoredly that his very victim could not be angry with him. As for those he served, he was their prime favorite; there was nothing they could to mortal about it, or you'll be hanged, as sure as your want to be done in the parchment line, that Murtough would not find out some way of doing; and he was so pleasant a fellow, that he shared in the hospitality of all the best tables in the county. He kept good horses, was on every race-ground within twenty miles, and a steeple-chase was no steeple-chase without him. Then he betted freely, and, what's more, won his bets very generally; but no one found fault with him for that. and he took your money with such a good grace, and mostly gave you a bon mot in exchange for it-so that. next to winning the money yourself, you were glad it was won by Murtough Murphy.

The squire read his letter two or three times, and made his comments as he proceeded. "'Working heaven and earth to '-ha!-so that's the work O'Grady's at-that's old friendship,-foul!-foul! and after all the money I lent him, too; he'd better take care-I'll be down on him if he plays false;-not that I'd like that much either; -but-let's see who's this coming down to oppose me?-Sack Scatterbrain-the biggest fool from this to himself;-the fellow can't ride a bit,-a pretty member for a sporting county! 'I lodge at a milliner's' -divil doubt you, Murtough; I'll engage you do. Bad luck to him!-he'd rather be fooling away his time in a back parlor, behind a bonnet shop, than minding the interests of the county. 'Pension'-ha!-wants it sure enough;-take care, O'Grady, or, by the powers, I'll be at you. You may balk all the bailiffs, and defy any other man to serve you with a writ; but, by jingo! if I take the matter in hand, I'll be bound I'll get it done. Stephen's Green-big ditch-where I used to hunt water-rats.' Divil sweep you, Murphy, you'd rather be hunting water-rats any day than minding your business. He's a clever fellow for all that. 'Favorite bitch, Mrs. Egan.' Ay! there's the end of it-with his bit o' po'thry, too! The divil!"

The squire threw down the letter, and then his eye caught the other two that Andy had purloined. "More of that stupid blackguard's work!-robbing the mail-no less!-that fellow will be hanged some time or other. Egad, maybe they'll hang him for this! What's best to be done? Maybe it will be the safest way to see whom they are for, and send them to the parties, and request they will say nothing; that's it."

The squire here took up the letters that lay before him, to read their superscriptions; and the first he turned over was directed to Gustavus Granby O'Grady, Esq., Neck-or-nothing Hall, Knockbotherum. This was what is called a curious coincidence. Just as he had been reading all about O'Grady's intended treachery to him, here was a letter to that individual, and with the Dublin post-mark too, and a very grand seal.

The squire examined the arms; and, though not versed in the mysteries of heraldry, he thought he remembered enough of most of the arms he had seen to say that this armorial bearing was a strange one to him. He turned the letter over and over again, and looked at it back and front, with an expression in his face that said, as plain as countenance could speak, "I'd give other." a trifle to know what is inside of this." He looked at the seal again: "Here's a-goose I think it is, sitting on a bowl with cross-bars on it, and a spoon in its mouth: like the fellow that owns it, may be. A goose with a silver spoon in its mouth—well, here's the gable-end of a house, and a bird sitting on the top of it. Could it be and-" "Well, by the powers! that's the most extraordinary | Sparrow? There is a fellow called Sparrow, an undersecretary at the Castle. D-n it! I wish I knew what

The squire threw down the letter as he said, "D-n it!" but took it up again in a few seconds, and catching it edgewise between his forefinger and thumb, gave a gentle pressure that made the letter gape at its extremities, and then, exercising that sidelong glance which is peculiar to postmasters, waiting-maids, and magpies who inspect marrowbones, peeped into the interior of the epistle, saying to himself as he did so, "All's fair in war, and why not in electioneering?" His face, which was screwed up to the scrutinizing pucker, gradually lengthened as he caught some words that were on the last turn-over of the sheet, and so could be read thoroughly, and his brow darkened into the deepest frown as he scanned these lines: "As you very properly and pungently remark, poor Egan is a spoon -a mere spoon.' "Am I a spoon, you rascal?" said the squire, tearing the letter into pieces, and throwing it into the fire. "And so, Misther O'Grady, you say I'm a spoon!" and the blood of the Egans rose as the head of that pugnacious family strode up and down the room: "I'll spoon you, my buck!-I'll settle your hash! maybe I'm a spoon you'll sup sorrow with yet!"

Here he took up the poker, and made a very angry lunge at the fire that did not want stirring, and there he beheld the letter blazing merrily away. He dropped the poker as if he had caught it by the hot end, as he exclaimed, "What the d-l shall I do? I've burnt the letter!" This threw the squire into a fit of what he was wont to call his "considering cap;" and he sat with his feet on the fender for some minutes, occasionally muttering to himself what he had begun with,-"What the d-I shall I do? It's all owing to that infernal Andy-I'll murder that fellow some time or other. If he hadn't brought it—I shouldn't have seen it, to be sure, if I hadn't looked; but the temptation—a saint couldn't have withstood it. Confound it! what a stupid trick to burn it! Another here, too-must burn that as well, and say nothing about either of them;" and he took up the second letter, and merely looking at the address, threw it into the fire. He then rung the bell, and desired Andy to be sent to him. As soon as that desired him, with peculiar emphasis, to shut the door, and then opened upon him with:

"You unfortunate rascal!"

"Yis, your honor." "Do you know that you might be hanged for what you did to-day?"

"What did I do, sir?" "You robbed the post-office."

"How did I rob it, sir?" "You took two letters that you had no right to." "It's no robbery for a man to get the worth of his

"Will you hold your tongue, you stupid villain! I'm not joking; you absolutely might be hanged for robbing the post-office."

"Sure I didn't know there was any harm in what I done; and for that matter sure, if they're sitch wonderful value, can't I go back again wid 'em?"

"No, you thief! I hope you've not said a word to any one about it."

"Not the sign of a word passed my lips about it." "You're sure?"

"Sartin!"

"Take care, then, that you never open your mouth name is Andy Rooney."

"Oh! at that rate I never will. But maybe your honor thinks I ought to be hanged?"

"No; because you did not intend to do a wrong thing; but, only I have pity on you; I could hang you to-morrow for what you have done."

"Thank you, sir." "I've burnt the letters, so no one can know anything about the business unless you tell on yourself; so remember-not a word."

"Faith, I'll be dumb as the dumb baste." "Go now; and once for all, remember you'll be hanged so sure as you ever mention one word about this affair."

Andy made a bow and a scrape, and left the squire, who hoped the secret was safe. He then took a ruminating walk round the pleasure-grounds, revolving plans of retaliation upon his false friend O'Grady, and having determined to put the most severe and sudden measure of the law in force against him, for the money in which he was indebted to him, he only awaited the arrival of Murtough Murphy from Dublin to execute his vengeance. Having settled this in his own mind, he became more contented, and said, with a self-satisfied nod of the head, "We'll see who's the spoon."

In a few days Murtough Murphy returned from Dublin, and to Merryvale he immediately proceeded. The squire opened to him directly his intention of commencing hostile law proceedings against O'Grady, and asked what most summary measures could be put in practice against him.

"Oh! various, various, my dear squire," said Murphy; "but I don't see any great use in doing so yet-he has not openly avowed himself."

"But does he not intend to coalesce with the other party?" "I believe so—that is, if he's to get the pension." "Well, and that's as good as done, you know; for if they want him, the pension is easily managed."

"I am not so sure of that." "Why, they're as plenty as blackberries." "Very true; but you see, Lord Gobblestown swallows all the pensions for his own family; and there are a great many complaints in the market against him for plucking that blackberry-bush very bare indeed; and unless Sack Scatterbrain has swingeing interest, the pension may not be such an easy thing." "But still O'Grady has shown himself not my friend." "My dear squire, don't be so hot; he has not shown himself yet." "Well, but he means it."

"My dear squire, you oughtn't to jump at a conclusion as you would at a twelve-foot drain or a five-bar

"Well, he's a blackguard!" "No denying it; and therefore keep him on your side, if you can, or he'll be a troublesome customer on the

"I'll keep no terms with him; I'll slap at him directly. What can you do that's wickedest-latitat, capias -fee-faw fum, or whatever you call it?"

"Halloo, squire, you're overrunning your game; maybe after all, he won't join the Scatterbrains,

"I tell you it's no matter; he intended doing it, and that's all the same. I'll slap at him-I'll blister him." Murtough Murphy wondered at this blind fury of the squire, who, being a good-humored and good-natured fellow in general, puzzled the attorney the more by his present manifest malignity against O'Grady. But he had not seen the turn-over of the letter: he had not seen "spoon"-the real and secret cause of the "warto-the-knife" spirit which was kindled in the squire's

"Of course, you can do what you please; but, if you'll take a fr end's advice-"

"I tell you I'll blister him."

"He certainly bled you very freely."

"I'll blister him, I tell you, and that smart. Lose no time, Murphy, my boy: let loose the dogs of law on him, and harass him till he'd wish the d-I had him." "Just as you like, but-"

"I'll have it my own way, I tell you; so say no more,"

"I'll commence against him at once, then, as you wish it; but it's no use, for you know very well that it will be impossible to serve him."

"Let me alone for that? Ill be bound I'll find fellows to get the inside of him."

"Why, his house is barricaded like a jail, and he has dogs enough to bait all the bulls in the country." "No matter: just send me the blister for him, and I'll engage I'll stick it on him."

"Very well, squire; you shall have the blister as soon as it can be got ready. I'll tell you when you may send over to me for it, and your messenger shall have it hot and warm for him. Good-bye, squire."

"Good bye, Murphy!-lose no time," "In the twinkling of a bedpost. Are you going to Tom Durfy's steeple-chase?"

"I'm not sure." "I've a bet on it. Did you see the widow Flannagan lately? You didn't? They say Tom's pushing it strong there. The widow has money, you know, and Tom does it all for the love o' God; for you know, squire, there are two things God hates-a coward and a poor man. Now, Tom's no coward; and, that he may be sure of the love o' God on the other score, he's making up to the widow; and as he's a slashing fellow, she's nothing loth, and for fear of any one cutting him out, Tom keeps as sharp a lookout after her as she does after him. He's fierce on it, and looks pistols at any one that attempts putting his comether on the widow, while she looks 'as soon as you plaze,' as plain as an optical lecture can enlighten the heart of man: in short, Tom's all ram's horns, and the widow all sheep's eyes. Good bye, squire." And Murtough put his spurs to his horse, and cantered down the avenue, whistling the last popular tune.

Andy was sent over to Murtough Murphy's for the law-process at the appointed time; and as he had to pass through the village, Mrs. Egan desired him to call at the apothecary's for some medicine that was prescribed for one of the children.

"What'll I ax for, ma'am?"

"I'd be sorry to trust to you, Andy, for remembering. Here's the prescription; take care of it, and Mr. M'Garry will give you something to bring back; and mind, if it's a powder-"

"Is it gunpowdher, ma'am?" "No-you stupid-will you listen? I say, if it's a powder, don't let it get wet as you did the sugar the other day."

"No, ma'am." "And if it's a bottle, don't break it as you did the

"No, ma'am."

"And make haste."

"Yis, ma'am;" and off went Andy. In going through the village, he forgot to leave the prescription at the apothecary's and pushed on for the attorney's; there he saw Murtough Murphy, who handed him the law process, inclosed in a cover, with a note to the squire.

"Have you been doing anything very clever lately, Andy?" said Murtough.

"I don't know, sir," said Andy. "Did you shoot any one with soda-water since I saw you last?"

Andy grinned. "Did you kill any more dogs lately, Andy?" "Faix, you're too hard on me, sir; sure I never killed but one dog, and that was an accident-" "An accident!-curse your impudence, you thief! Do you think, if you killed one of the pack on purpose, we wouldn't cut the very heart out o' you with our hunting whips?" "Faith, I wouldn't doubt you, sir; but, sure, how could I help that divil of a mare runnin' away wid me, and thramplin' the dogs?" "Why didn't you hold her, you thief?" "Hould her, indeed!-y u just might as well expect to stop fire among flax a, that one."

"Well, be off with you now, Andy, and take care of what I gave you for the squire.'

"Oh, never fear, sir," said Andy, as he turned his horse's head homeward. He stopped at the apothecary's in the village, to execute his commission for the "misthis." On telling the son of Galen that he wanted some physic "for one o' the childre' up at the big house," the dispenser of the healing art asked what physic he wanted.

Faith, I dunna what physic."

"What's the matter with the child?"

"He's sick, sir."

"I suppose so, indeed, or you wouldn't be sent for medicine. You're always making some blunder. You come here, and don't know what description of medicine is wanted." "Don't I?" said Andy, with a great air.

"No, you don't, you omadhaun!" said the apothe-

Andy fumbled in his pockets, and could not lay hold of the paper his mistress intrusted him with, until he had emptied them thoroughly of their contents upon the counter of the shop; and then, taking the prescription from the collection, he said: "So you tell me I don't know the description of the physic I'm to get. Now, you see, you're out; for that's the description!" and he slapped the counter impressively with his hand, as he threw down the recipe before the apothecary.

While the medicine was in the course of preparation for Andy, he commenced restoring to his pockets the various parcels he had taken from them in hunting for the recipe. No, it happened that he had laid them down close beside some articles that were compounded, and sealed up for going out, on the apothecary's counter; and as the law process which Andy had received from Murtough Murphy chanced to resemble in form another inclosure that lay beside it, containing a blister, Andy, under the influence of his peculiar genius, popped the blister into his pocket instead of the package which had been confided to him by the attorney; and having obtained the necessary medicine from M'Garry, rode home with great self-complacency that he had not forgotten to do a single thing that had been intrusted to him. "I'm all right this time," said Andy to himself.

Scarcely had he left the apothecary's when another messenger alighted at its door, and asked "If Squire O'Grady's things was ready?" "There they are," said the innocent M'Garry, pointing to the bottles, boxes, and blister, he had made up and set aside, little dreaming that the blister had been exchanged for a law process; and Squire O'Grady's own messenger popped into his pocket the legal instrument that it was as much as any seven men's lives were worth to bring within gunshot of Neck-or-nothing Hall.

dome he went, and the sound of the old gate creaking on its hinges, at the entrance of the avenue, awoke the deep-mouthed dogs around the house, who rushed infuriate to the spot to devour the unholy intruder on the peace and privacy of the patrician O'Grady; but impertinence of Murtough Murphy; and as he switched they recognized the old gray hack and his rider, and it up and down with a powerful arm, to try its weight quietly wagged their tails and trotted back, and licked their lips at the thoughts of the bailiff they had hoped to eat. The door of Neck-or-nothing Hall was carefully unbarred and unchained, and the nurse-tender was handed the parcel from the apothecary's, and re-ascended to the sick room with slippered foot as quietly as she could; for the renowned O'Grady was, according to her account, "as cross as two sticks;" and she protested, furthermore, "that her heart was gray with over the country as Dick the Divil than Dick Dawson.

Whenever O'Grady was in a bad humor, he had a strange fashion of catching at some word that either he himself, or those with whom he spoke, had uttered, and after often repeating it, or rather mumbling it over in his mouth, as if he were chewing it, off he started into a canter of ridiculous rhymes to the aforesaid word, and sometimes one of these rhymes would suggest a new idea, or some strange association which had the oddest effect possible; and to increase the absurlity. the jingle was gone through with as much solemnity as if he were indulging in a deep and interesting reverie; so that it was difficult to listen without laughing, which might prove a serious matter when O'Grady was in one | futurity, all from his sowing. of the lantarums, as his wife used to call them.

Mrs. O'Grady was near the bed of the sick man as the mounted to his saddle.

nurse-tender entered. "Here's the things for your honor, now," said she, in her most soothing tone. "I wish the d-l had you and them!" said O'Grady. "Gusty dear!" said his wife. (She might have said stormy instead of gusty.) "Oh! they'll do you good, your honor," said the nurse-tender, curtseying, and uncorking bottles, and opening a pill-box. O'Grady made a face at the pill-box, and repeated the word "pills" several times, with an expression of extreme disgust. "Pills-pills-kills-wills-ay-make your wills-make them-take them-shake them. When taken—to be well shaken—show me that bottle."

The nurse-tender handed a vial, which O'Grady shook violently. "Curse them all!" said the squire. "A pretty thing to have a gentleman's body made a perfect sink, for these blackguard doctors and apothecaries to pour their dirty drugs into-faugh!-drugs-mugs-jugs!" he shook the pvial again and looked through it.

"Isn't it nice and pink, darlin'?" said the nurse-ten-"Pink!" said O'Grady, eying her askance, as if he could have eaten her. "Pink, you old besom, pink"he uncorked the vial, and put it to his nose. phew-1" and he repeated a rhyme to pink which would not look well in print.

"Now, sir, dear, there's a little blister just to go on your chest-if you plaze."

"A what?"

"A warm plasther, dear."

"A blister you said, you old divil." "Well, sure, it's something to relieve you."

The squire gave a deep growl, and his wife put in the usual appeal of "Gusty, dear!"

"Hold your tongue, will you? How would you like it? I wish you had it on your -'

"Deed-an-deed, dear," said the nurse-tender. "By the 'ternal war, if you say another word, I'll throw the jugat you!" "And there's a nice dhrop o' gruel I have on the fire for you," said the nurse, pretending not to mind the rising anger of the squire, as she stirred the gruel with one hand, while with the other she marked herself with the sign of the cross, and said in a mumbling manner. "God presarve us! he's the most cantankerous Christian I ever kem across!" "Show me that infernal thing," said the squire.

"What thing, dear?" "You know well enough, you old hag!-that blackguard blister!"

"Here it is, dear. Now just open the burst o' your shirt, and let me put it on you."

"Give it into my hand here, and let me see it."

"Sartinly, sir; but I think, if you'd let me just-" "Give it to me, I tell you," said the squire, in a tone so flerce that the nurse paused in her unfolding of the packet and handed it with fear and trembling to the already indignant O'Grady. But it is only imagination can figure the outrageous fury of the squire when, on opening the envelope with his own hand, he be held the law process before him. There, in the heart of his castle, with his bars, and bolts, and bull-dogs, and blunderbusses around him, he was served—absolutely served and he had no doubt the nurse-tender was bribed to betray him.

A roar and a jump up in bed, first startled his wife into terror and put the nurse on the defensive.

"You infernal old strap!" shouted he, as he clutched up a handful of bottles on the table near him and flung them at the nurse, who was near the fire at the time; and she whipped the pot of gruel from the grate, and converted it into a means of defense, against the vialpelting storm.

Mrs. O'Grady rolled herself up in the bed-curtains while the nurse screeched "Murther!" and at last, when O'Grady saw that bottles were of no avail, he scrambled out of bed, shouting, "Where's my blunderbuss?" and the nurse-tender, while he endeavored to get it down from the rack where it was suspended over the mantelpiece, bolted out of the door, and ran to the most remote corner of the house for shelter.

In the meantime, how fared it at Merryvale. Andy returned with his parcel for the squire, and his note from Murtaugh Murphy, which ran thus:

"My DEAR SQUIRE—I send you the blister for O'Grady as you insist on it; but I think you won't find it easy to serve him with it.—Your obedient and obliged,

" MURTOUGH MURPHY. " To Edward Egan, Esq., Merryvale."

The squire opened the cover, and when he saw a real instead of a figurative blister, grew crimson with rage. He could not speak for some minutes, his indignation was so excessive. "So," said he at last, "Mr. Murtough Murphy, you think to cut your jokes with me, do you? By all that's sacred, I'll cut such a joke on you with the biggest horsewhip I can find, that you'll remember it. "Dear Squire, I send you the blister." Bad luck to your impidence! Wait till awhile ago-that's all. By this and that, you'll get such a blistering from me, that all the spermaceti in M'Garry's shop won't cure you.

CHAPTER III.

SQUIRE EGAN was as good as his word. He picked out the most suitable horsewhip for chastising the fancied and pliancy, the whistling of the instrument through the air was music to his ears, and whispered of promised joy in the flagellation of the jocular attorney.

"We'll see who can make the sorest blister," said the squire. "I'll back whalebone against Spanish flies any day. Will you bet, Dick?" said he to his brother-in-law, who was a wild, helter-skelter sort of fellow, better known "I'll back your bet, Ned." "There's no fun in that, Dick, as there is nobody to take it up. "May be Murtough will. Ask him before you thrash him; you'd better.

"As for him," said the squire, "I'll be bound he'll back my bet after he gets a taste o' this;" and the horsewhip whistled as he spoke.

"I think he had better take care of his back than his bet," said Dick, as he followed the squire to the hall door, where his horse was in waiting for him, under the care of the renowned Andy, who little dreamed of the extensive harvest of mischief which was ripening in

"Don't kill him quite, Ned," said Dick, as the squire

"Why, if I went to horsewhip a gentleman, of course I should only shake my whip at him; but an attorney is another affair. And, as I'm sure he'll have an action again' me for assault, I think I may as well get the worth of my money out of him, to say nothing of teaching him better manners for the future than to play off his jokes on his employers." With these words off he rode in search of the devoted Murtough, who was not at home when the squire reached his house; but as he was returning through the village, he espied him coming down the street in company with Tom Durfy and the widow, who were laughing heartily at some joke Murtough was telling them, which seemed to amuse him as much as his hearers.

"I'll make him laugh at the wrong side of his mouth," thought the squire, alighting and giving his horse to the care of one of the little ragged boys who were idling in the street. He approached Murphy with a very threatening aspect, and confronting him and his party so as to produce a halt, he said, as distinctly as his rage blackguard, I'll teach you how you'll cut your jokes on exclaiming "Faugh!" with an expression of the most me again; I'll blister you, my buck!" and laying hands on the astonished Murtough with the last word, he offender, and shut up her nose between her forefinger began a very smart horsewhipping of the attorney. The widow screamed, Tom Durfy swore, and Murtough roared, with some interjectional curses. At last he escaped from the squire's grip, leaving the lapel of his coat in his possession; and Tom Durfy interposed his person between them when he saw an intention on the part of the flagellator to repeat his dose of horsewhip.

"Let me at him, sir, or by-" "Fie, fie, squire !-- to horsewhip a gentleman like a cart-horse,

"A gentleman!—an attorney you mean." "I say a gentleman, Squire Egan," cried Murtough flercely, roused to gallantry by the presence of a lady, and smarting under a sense of injury and whalebone. "I'm a gentleman, sir, and demand the satisfaction of a gentleman. I put my honor into your hands, Mr. Durfy."

"Between his fingers and thumb, you mean, for there's not a handful of it," said the squire.

"Well, sir," replied Tom Durfy, "little or much, I'll take charge of it. That's right, my cock," said he to Murtough, who, notwithstanding his desire to assume a warlike air, could not resist the natural impulse of rubbing his back and shoulder which tingled with pain. while he exclaimed, "Satisfaction!"

"Very well," said the squire, "you name yourself as Mr. Murphy's friend?" added he to Durfy. "The same, sir," said Tom. "Whom do you name as yours!"

"I suppose you know one Dick the Divil?" "A very proper person, sir;-no better; I'll go to him directly."

The widow clung to Tom's arm, and looking tenderly at him, cried, "Oh Tom, Tom, take care of your precious life!"

"Bother!" said Tom. "Ah, Squire Egan, don't be so bloodthirsty."

"Oh, Tom! Tom!" said the widow.

"Fudge, woman!" said the squire. "Ah, Mr. Murphy, I'm sure the squire's very sorry for beating you. "Divil a bit," said the squire.

"There, ma'am," said Murphy, "you see he'll make no apology." "Apology!" said Durfy, "apology for a horsewhip-ping, indeed! Nothing but handling a horsewhip (which I wouldn't ask any gentleman to do,) or a shot, can settle the matter."

"Ba! ba! ba!" shouted Tom, making a crying face at her. "Arrah, woman, don't be making a fool of yourself. Go in to the 'pothecary's, and get something under your nose to revive you: and let us mind our own business."

The widow with her eyes turned up, and an exclamation to Heaven, was retiring to M'Garry's shop, wring. ing her hands, when she was nearly knocked down by M'Garry himself, who rushed from his own door, at the same moment that an awful smash of his shop-window and the demolition of his blue and red bottles alarmed the ears of the bystanders, while their eyes were drawn from the late belligerent parties to a chase which took place down the street of the apothecary, roaring "Murder!" followed by Squire O'Grady with an enormous cudgel.

O'Grady, believing that M'Garry and the nurse-tender had combined to serve him with a writ, determined to wreak double vengeance on the apothecary, as the nurse had escaped him; and, notwithstanding all his illness and the appeals of his wife, he left his bed and rode to the village, to "break every bone in M'Garry's skin." When he entered the shop, the pharmacopolist was much surprised, and said, with a congratulatory grin at the great man, "Dear me, Squire Grady, I'm delighted to see you."

"Are you, you scoundrel!" said the squire, making a blow of his cudgel at him, which was fended off by an iron pestle the apothecary fortunately had in his hand. The enraged O'Grady made a rush behind the counter, which the apothecary nimbly jumped over, crying "Murder!" as he made for the door, followed by his pursuer, who gave a back-handed slap at the windowbottles en passant, and produced the crash which astonished the widow, who now joined her screams to the general hue and cry; for an indiscriminate chase of all the ragamuffins in the town, with barking curs and screeching children, followed the flight of M'Garry and the pursuing squire.

"What the divil is all this about?' said Tom Durfy. laughing. "By the powers! I suppose there's something in the weather to produce all this fun-though it's early in the year to begin thrashing, for the harvest isn't in yet. But, however, let us manage our little affair, now that we're left in peace and quietness, for the blackguards are all over the bridge after the hunt. I'll go to Dick the Divil immediately, squire, and arrange time and place."

"There's nothing like saving time and trouble on these occasions," said the squire. "Dick is at my house. I can arrange time and place with you this minute, and he will be on the ground with me." "Very well," said Tom; "where is it to be?"

"Suppose we say the cross-roads, halfway between this and Merryvale? There's very pretty ground there. and we shall be able to get our pistols and all that ready in the meantime between this and four o'clockand it will be pleasanter to have it all over before din-

"Certainly, squire," said Tom Durfy; "we'll be there at four. Till then, good-morning, squire;" and he and his man walked off.

The widow, in the meantime, had been left to the care of the apothecary's boy, whose tender mercies were now for the first time in his life, demanded towards a fainting lady; for the poor raw country lad. having to do with a sturdy peasantry in every-day matters, had never before seen the capers cut by a lady who thinks it proper, and delicate, and becoming. to display her sensibility in a swoon; and truly her sobs, and small screeches, and little stampings and kickings, amazed young gallipot. Smelling salts were applied; - they were rather weak, so the widow inhaled the pleasing odor with a sigh, but did not recover. Sal volatile was next put into requisition;-this was something stronger, and made her wriggle on her chair, and throw her head about with sundry "Ohs!" and "Ahs!" The boy, beginning to be alarmed at the extent of the widow's syncope, bethought himself of assafcetida; and, taking down a goodly bottle of that sweet-smelling stimulant, gave the widow the benefit of the whole jar under her nose. Scarcely had the stopper been withdrawn, when she would permit him to speak, "You little insignificant gave a louder screech than she had yet executed, and concentrated disgust, opened her eyes flercely upon the and thumb against the offence, and snuffled forth at the astonished boy, "Get out o' that, you dirty cur! Can't you let a lady faint in peace and quietness? Gracious Heavens! would you smother me, you nasty brute? Oh, Tom, where are you?" and she took to sobbing forth "Tom! Tom!" and put her handkerchief to her eyes, to hide the tears that were not there, while from behind the corner of the cambric she kept a sharp eye on the street, and observed what was going on. She went on acting her part very becomingly, until the moment Tom Durfy walked off with Murphy; but then she could feign no longer, and Jumping up from her seat, with an exclamation of "The brute!" she ran to the door, and looked down the street after them. "The savage!" sobbed the widow; "the hardhearted monster! to abandon me here to die-oh! to use me so-to leave me like a-like a "-(the widow was fond of similes)-" like an old shoe-like a dirty glove-like a-like I don't know what!" (the usual fate of similes). "Mister Durfy, I'll punish you for this-I will !" said the widow, with an energetic emphasis on the last word; and she marched out of the shop, boiling over with indignation, through which nevertheless, a little bubble of love now and then rose to the surface; and by the time she reached her own door, love predominated, and she sighed as she laid her hand on the knocker: "After all, if the dear fellow should be killed, what would become of me!-oh!-and that wretch, Dick Dawson, too-two of them. The worst of these merry devils is they are always fighting."

The squire had ridden immediately homewards, and told Dick Dawson the piece of work that was before them.

"And so he will have a shot at you, instead of an action?" said Dick. "Well there's pluck in that: I wish he was more of a gentleman, for your sake. It's dirty work, shooting attorneys." "He's enough of a gentleman, Dick, to make it impossible for me to refuse him."

"Certainly, Ned," said Dick. "Do you know, is he anything of a shot?"

"Faith, he makes very pretty snipe shooting, but I don't know if he has experience of the grass before breakfast."

"You must try and find out from some one on the ground; because, if the poor divil isn't a good shot, I wouldn't like to kill him, and I'll let him off easy_I'll give it to him in the pistol-arm, or so."

"Yery well, Ned. Where are the flutes? I must ak over them."

Here," said the squire, producing a very handsome nahogany case of Rigby's best. Dick opened the case with the utmost care, and took up one of the pistols tenderly, handling it as delicately as if it were a young child or a lady's hand. He clicked the lock back and none." forward a few times; and, his ear not being satisfied at the music it produced, he said he should like to examine them: "At all events they want a touch of oil." "Well, keep them out of the misthriss' sight, Dick, for she might be alarmed."

"Divil a taste," says Dick; "she's a Dawson, and there never was a Dawson yet that did not know men must be men."

"That's true, Dick. I would not mind so much if she wasn't in a delicate situation just now, when it couldn't | ground. be expected of the woman to be so stout; so go, like a good fellow, into your own room, and Andy will bring you anything you want."

Five minutes after, Dick was engaged in cleaning the dueling pistols, and Andy at his elbow, with his mouth wide open, wondering at the interior of the locks which Dick had just taken off.

"Oh, my heavens! but that's a quare thing, Misther Dick, sir," said Andy, going to take it up.

"Keep your fingers off it, you thief, do!" roared Dick, making a rap of the turnscrew at Andy's knuck-

"Shure, I'll save you the trouble o' rubbin' that, Misther Dick, if you let me: here's the shabby leather." "I wouldn't let your clumsy fist near it, Andy nor your shabby leather, you villain, for the world. Go get me some oil."

Andy went on his errand, and returned with a can of tamp-oil to Dick, who swore at him for his stupidity; right; you bring me lamp-oil for a pistol."

"Well, sure I thought lamp-oil was the right thing for burnin'".

"And who wants to burn it, you savage?"

"Aren't you going to fire it, sir?" "Choke you, you vagabond," said Dick, who could not resist laughing, nevertheless; "be off, and get me some sweet oil; but don't tell any one what it's for."

Andy retired, and Dick pursued his polishing of the books. Why he used such a blundering fellow as Andy for a messenger might be wondered at, only that Dick was fond of fun, and Andy's mistakes were a particular source of amusement to him, and on all occasions when he could have Andy in his company he made him his attendant. When the sweet oil was produced, Dick looked about for a feather; but, not finding one, desired Andy to fetch him a pen. Andy went on his errand, and returned, after some delay, with an ink bottle.

"I brought you the ink, sir; but I can't find a pin." "Confound your numskull! I didn't say a word about ink-I asked for a pen." "And what use would a pin be without ink, now I ax yourself, Misther Dick?"

"I'd knock your brains out if you had any, you omadhavn! Go along, and get me a feather, and make haste."

Andy went off, and having obtained a feather, reaturned to Dick, who began to tip certain portions of the lock very delicately with oil.

"What's that for, Misther Dick, sir, if you plaze?"

"To make it work smooth."

"And what's that thing you're grazin' now, sir?" "That's the tumbler."

"O Lord! a tumbler-what a quare name for it. It thought there was no tumbler but a tumbler for punch." "That's the tumbler you would like to be cleaning the inside of, Andy." "Thrue for you, sir. And what's that little thing you have your hand on now, sir?"

"That's the cock." "Oh, dear, a cock! Is there e'er a hin in it, sir?" "No, nor a chicken either, though there is a feather." "The one in your hand, sir, that you're grazin' it

"It's the feather, I suppose, makes it fly."

"No doubt of it, Andy." "Well, there's some sinse in that name, then; but who'd think of sich a thing as a tumbler and a cork in a pistle? And what's that place that opens and shuts,

"The pan." "Well, there's sinse in that name, too, bekase there's tire in the thing; and it's as nath'ral to say pan to that as to a fryin'-pan-isn't it, Misther Dick?" "Oh! there was a great gunmaker lost in you, Andy," said Dick, as he screwed on the locks, which he had regulated to his mind, and began to examine the various departments of the pistol-case, to see that it was properly provided. He took the instrument to cut some circles of thin leather, and Andy again asked him for the name o' that thing.

"This is called the punch, Andy." "So there is the punch as well as the tumbler, sir." "Ay, and very strong punch it is, you see, Andy;" and Dick struck it with his little mahogany mallet, and cut his patches of leather.

"And what's that for, sir?—the leather I mane." "That's for putting round the ball."

"Is it for fear 'twould hurt him too much when you shot him?" "You're a queer customer, Andy," said Dick, smil-

And what weeshee little balls thim is, sir."

"They are always small for dueling-pistols." "Oh, then thim is jewelin' pistles. Why, musha, Misther Dick, is it goin' to fight a jule you are?" said Andy, looking at him with earnestness. "No. Andy, but the master is; but don't say a word about it." "Not a word for the world. The masther's goin' to right! God send him safe out iv it! amin. And who is he going to fight, Misther Dick?" "Murphy, the attorney, Andy." "Oh, won't the masther disgrace himself by fightin' the 'torney?" "How dare you say such a thing of your master?" "I ax your pard'n, Misther Dick; but sure you know what I mane. I hope he'll shoot him."

"Why, Andy, Murtough was always very good to squire's?" you, and now you wish him to be shot."

man the masther?"

"wouldn't it be an iligant thing to put two balls into the pistle instead o' one, and give the masther a chance over the 'torney !"

"Oh, you murdherous villain!" "Arrah! why shouldn't the masther have a chance over him-sure he has childre, and 'Torney Murphy has

"At any rate, Andy, I suppose you'd give the masther a ball additional for every child he has, and that would make eight. So you might as well give him a blunderbuss and slugs at once."

Dick loaded the pistol-case, having made all right, and desired Andy to mount a horse, carry it by a back road out of the demesne, and wait at a certain gate he named until he should be joined there by himself and the squire, who proceeded at the appointed time to the

Andy was all ready, and followed his master and Dick with great pride, bearing the pistol-case after them to the ground, where Murphy and Tom Durfy were ready to receive them; and a great number of spectators were assembled, for the noise of the business had gone abroad, and the ground was in consequence crowded.

Tom Durfy had warned Murtough Murphy, who had no experience as a pistol man, that the squire was a capital shot, and that his only chance was to fire as quickly as he could. "Slap at him, Morty, my boy, the minute you get the word; and if you don't hit him itself, it will prevent his dwelling on his aim."

Tom Durfy and Dick the Devil soon settled the preliminaries of the ground and mode of firing, and twelve paces having been marked, both the seconds opened their pistol-cases and prepared to load. Andy was close to Dick all the time, kneeling beside the pistol-case, which lay on the sod; and as Dick turned round to settle some other point on which Tom Durfy questioned "The divil fly away with you—you never do anything him, Andy thought he might snatch the opportunity of giving his master "the chance" he suggested to his distance, flying over hedge and ditch with surprising second. "Sure, if Misther Dick wouldn't like to do it, velocity, and, from the level nature of the ground, an that's no raison I wouldn't," said Andy to himself, "and, by the powers! I'll pop in a ball onknownst to him." And, sure enough, Andy contrived, while the seconds were engaged with each other, to put a ball into each pistol before the barrel was loaded with powder, so that when Dick took up his pistols to load, a bullet lay between the powder and the touch-hole. Now, this must have been discovered by Dick, had he been cool; but he and Tom Durfy had wrangled very much about the point they had been discussing, and Dick, at no time the quietest person in the world, was in such a rage that the pistols were loaded by him without any of Andy's ingenious interference, and he handed a harmless weapon to his brother-in-law when he placed him on his ground.

The word was given; Murtough, following his friend's advice, fired instantly—bang he went, while the squire returned but a flash in the pan. He turned a look of reproach upon Dick, who took the pistol silently from him, and handed him the other, having carefully looked to the priming after the accident which happened to the first.

Durfy handed his man another pistol also; and before he left his side, said in a whisper, "Don't forget-have the first fire.'

Again the word was given. Murphy blazed away a rapid and harmless shot; for his hurry was the squire's safety, while Andy's murderous intentions were his sal-

"D-n the pistel!" said 'he squire, throwing it down in a rage. Dick took it up with manifest indignation, and d-d the powder.

"Your powder's damp, Ned." "No, it's not," said the squire, "it's you who have bungled the loading." "Me!" said Dick, with a look of mingled rage and astonishment. "I bungle the loading of pistols! I, that have stepped more ground and arranged more affairs than any man in the country! Arrah, be aisy, Ned!"

Tom Durfy now interfered, and said for the present it was no matter, as, on the part of his friend, he begged to express himself satisfied.

"But it's very hard we're not to have a shot," said Dick, poking the touch-hole of the pistol with a pricker, "No, but this little thing-that is called the feather- which he had just taken from the case which Andy was holding before him.

"Why, my dear Dick," said Durfy, "as Murphy has had two shots, and the squire has not had the return of either, he declares he will not fire at him again; and, under these circumstances, I must take my man off the ground."

"Very well," said Dick, still poking the touch-nole, and examining the point of the pricker as he withdrew it.

"And now Murphy wants to know, since the affair is all over and his honor satisfied, what was your brotherin-law's motive in assaulting him this morning, for he himself cannot conceive a cause for it."

"Oh, be aisy, Tom." "'Pon my soul it's true!" "Why, he sent him a blister-a regular apothecary's blister-instead of some law process, by way of a joke, and Ned wouldn't stand it."

Durfy held a moment's conversation with Murphy. who now advanced to the squire, and begged to assure him there must be some mistake in the business, for that he had never committed the impertinence of which he was accused.

"All I know is," said the squire, "that I got a blister, which my messenger said you gave him. "By virtue of my oath, squire, I never did it! I gave Andy an inclosure of the law process." "Then it's some mistake that vagabond has made." said the squire. "Come here, you sir!" he shouted to Andy. Now Andy at this moment stood trembling under the angry eye of Dick the Devil, who, having detected a bit of lead on the point of the pricker, guessed in a moment Andy had been at work, and the unformisgiving that he had made some blunder. don't you come here when I call you?" said the Mr. Murphy gave you for me yesterday?" "I brought it to your honor."

"No you didn't," said Murphy. "You've made some mistake."

"Divil a mistake I made," answered Andy, very "I wint home the minit you gev it to me." stoutly. "Did you go home direct from my house to the

"Sure, why wouldn't I rather have him kilt more M'Garry's by the way for some physic for the childre."

"That's it!" said Murtough; "he changed my in-But neither may be killed."

But neither may be killed."

Closure for a blister there; and if M'Garry has only on the bit o' parchment to pounced the n through her nose, and said "do.")

O'Grady, it will be the best joke I've heard this month of Sundays."

"He did! he did!" shouted Tom Durfy; "for don't you remember how O'Grady was after M'Garry this morning?"

"Sure enough," said Murtough, enjoying the double mistake. "By dad! Andy, you've made a mistake this time that I'll forgive you.

"By the powers o' war!" roared Dick the Devil; "I won't forgive him what he did now, though. What do you think?" said he, holding out the pistols, and growing crimson with rage, "may I never fire another shot, if he hasn't crammed a brace of bullets down the pistols before I loaded them; so no wonder you burned prime,

There was a universal laugh at Dick's expense, whose pride in being considered the most accomplished regulator of the duello was well known.

"Oh, Dick, Dick! you're a pretty second!" was shouted by all.

Dick, stung by the laughter, and feeling keenly the ridiculous position in which he was placed, made a rush at Andy, who, seeing the storm brewing, gradually sneaked away from the group, and when he perceived the sudden movement of Dick the Devil, took to his heels, with Dick after him.

"Hurra!" cried Murphy, "a race-a race! I'll bet on Andy-five pounds on Andy."

"Done!" said the squire: "I'll back Dick the Devil." "Tare an' ouns!" roared Murphy, "how Andy runs! Fear's a fine spur."

"So is rage," said the squire. "Dick's hot-foot after him. Will you double the bet?"

"Done!" said Murphy. The infection of betting caught the bystanders, and various gages were thrown and taken up upon the speed of the runners, who were getting rapidly into the extensive view could not be obtained, therefore Tom Durfy, the steeple-chaser, cried, "Mount, mount! or we'll lose the fun-into our saddles, and after them." Those who had steeds took the hint, and a numerous field of horsemen joined in the pursuit of Handy Andy and Dick the Devil, who still maintained great speed. The horsemen made for a neighboring hill, whence they could command a wider view; and the betting went on briskly, varying according to the vicissitudes of the race.

"Two to one on Dick-he's closing." "Done! Andy will wind him yet."

"Well done-there's a leap! Hurra! Dick's down! Well done !-- up again and going."

"Mind the next quickset hedge-that's a rasper, it's a wide gripe, and the hedge is as thick as a wall-Andy 'll stick in it-mind him-well leaped, by the powers! Ha! he's sticking in the hedge-Dick'll catch him now No, by jingo! he's pushed his way through-there, he's gone again on the other side. Ha! ha! ha! ha! look at him-he's in tatters! he has left half of his breeches in the hedge!"

"Dick is over now. Hurra! he has lost the skirt of his coat! Andy is gaining on him-two to one on Andy."

"Down he goes!" was shouted as Andy's foot slipped in making a dash at another ditch, into which he went head over heels, and Dick followed fast, and disappeared after him.

"Ride! ride!" shouted Tom Durfy; and the horsemen put their spurs into the flanks of their steeds, and were soon up to the scene of action. There was Andy, rolling over and over in the muddy bottom of a ditch, floundering in rank weeds and duck's meat, with Dick fastened on him, pummeling away most unmercifully, but not able to kill him altogether, for want of breath.

The horsemen, in a universal screech of laughter, dismounted, and disengaged the unfortunate Andy from the fangs of Dick the Devil, who was dragged out of the ditch much more like a scavenger than a gentleman.

The moment Andy got loose, away he ran again, with a rattling "Tally ho!" after him, and he never cried stop till he earthed himself under his mother's bed in the parent cabin.

Murtough Murphy characteristically remarked that the affair of the day had taken a very whimsical turn; -"Here are you and I, squire, who went out to shoot each other, safe and well, while one of the seconds has come off rather worse for the wear; and a poor devil, who had nothing to say to the matter in hand, good, bad or indifferent, is nearly killed."

The squire and Murtough then shook hands, and parted friends half an hour after they had met as foes; and even Dick contrived to forget his annoyance in an extra stoup of claret that day after dinner-filling more than one bumper in drinking confusion to Handy Andy, which seemed a rather unnecessary malediction.

CHAPTER IV.

AFTER the friendly parting of the foes (pro tempore), there was a general scatter of the party who had come to see the duel: and how strange is the fact, that as much as human nature is prone to shudder at death under the gentlest circumstances, yet men will congregate to be its witnesses when violence aggravates the calamity! A public execution or a duel is a focus where burning curiosity concentrates; in the latter case, Ireland bears the palm for a crowd; in the former, the annals of the Old Bailey can amply testify. Ireland has its own interest, too, in a place of execution, but not in the same degree as England. They have been too used to hanging in Ireland to make it piquant: "toujours perdrix" is a saying which applies in this as in many other cases. The gallows, in its palmy days, was shorn of its terrors: it became rather a pastime. For the victim it was a pastime with a vengeance; for through it all time was past with him. For the rabble who beheld tunate rascal, from the furious look of Dick, had a his agony, the frequency of the sight had blunted the "Why edge of horror, and only sharpened that of unnatural excitement. The great school, where law should be the squire. Andy laid down the pistol-case, and sneaked respected master, failed to inspire its intended awe;up to the squire. "What did you do with the letter the legislative lesson became a mockery; and death, instead of frowning with terror, grinned in a fool's cap from the scaffold.

This may be doubted now, when a milder spirit presides in the councils of the nation and on the bench; but those who remember Ireland not very long ago. can bear witness how lightly life was valued, or death regarded. Illustrative of this, one may refer to the story of the two basket-women in Dublin, who held "Yis, sir, I did-I wint direct home, and called at Mr. gentle converse on the subject of an approaching exe-

> "Won't you go see de man die to-morrow, Judy?" "Oh no, darlin'," said Judy. (By-the-bye, Judy pro

"Ah do, jewel," said her friend.

Judy again responded, "Do." "And why won't you go, dear?" inquired her friend again.

"I've to wash de child," said Judy. "Sure, didn't you wash it last week?" said her friend, in an expostulatory tone.

"Oh, well, I won't go," said Judy. "Troth, Judy, you're ruinin' your health," said this soft-hearted acquaintance; "dere's a man to die tomorrow, and you won't come-augh!-you dever take do divarshin!"

And wherefore is it thus? Why should tears bedew the couch of him who dies in the bosom of his family, surrounded by those who love him, whose pillow is smoothed by the hand of filial piety, whose past is without reproach, and whose future is bright with hoper and why should dry eyes behold the duelist or the culprit, in whom folly or guilt may be the cause of a death on which the seal of censure or infamy may be set, and whose futurity we must tremble to consider? With more reason might we weep for the fate of either of the latter than the former, and yet we do not. And nature is violated: a natural death demands and receives the natural tribute of tears; but a death of violence falls with a stunning force upon the nerves, and the fountain of pity stagnates and will not flow.

Though there was a general scattering of the persons who came to see the duel, still a good many rode homeward with Murphy, who, with his second, Tom Durfy, beside him, headed the party, as they rode gayly toward the town, and laughed over the adventure of Andy and

Dick.

"No one can tell how anything is to finish" said Tom Durfy; "here we came out to have a duel, and, in the end, it turned out a hunt."

I am glad you were not in at my death, however," said Murphy, who seemed particularly happy at not being killed. "You lost no time in firing, Murtough," said one of

"And small blame to me, Billy," answered Murphy; "Egan is a capital shot, and how did I know but he might take it into his head to shoot me?-for he's very hot when roused, though as good-natured a fellow in the main as ever broke bread; and yet I don't think, after all, he'd have liked to do me much mischief, thought I played him." "Will you tell us what it was?" cried another of the party, pressing forward, "for we can't make it out exactly, though we've heard something of it-wasn't it leeches you sent to him, telling him he was a blood-either; but, you see, he couldn't stand the joke he sucking villain?" A roar of laughter from Murtough followed this question. "Lord, how a story gets mangled and twisted!" said he, as soon as he could speak. "Leeches! what an absurdity! No, it was-"

"A bottle of castor oil, wasn't it, by way of a present of noyeau?" said another of the party, hurrying to the front to put forward his version of the matter. A second shout of laughter from Murphy greeted this third ention of the story. "If you will listen to me, I'll give you the genuine version," said Murtough, "which | is better, I promise you, than any which invention could supply. The fact is, Squire Egan is enraged against O'Grady, and applied to me to harass him in the parchment line, swearing he would blister him; and this phrase of blistering occurred so often, that when I sent him over a bit o' parchment, which he engaged to have served on my bold O'Grady, I wrote to him, 'Dear Squire, I send you the blister;' and that most ingenious of all blunderers, Handy Andy, being the bearer, and calling at Mr. M'Garry's shop on his way home, picked up from the counter a real blister, which was folded up in an inclosure, something like the process, and left the law-stinger behind him."

"That's grate!" cried Doyle. "Oh, you have not heard the best of it yet," added Murphy. "I am certain the bit of parchment was sent to O'Grady, for he was hunting M'Garry this morning through the town, with a cudgel of portentous dimensions-put that and that together."

"No mistake!" cried Doyle; "and divil pity O'Grady for he's a blustering, swaggering, overbearing, ill-tempered-" "Hillo, hillo, Bill!" interrupted Murphy, "you are too hard on the adjectives; besides, you'll spoil your appetite if you ruffle your temper, and that would fret me, for I intend you to dine with me to-day. "Faith an' I'll do that same, Murtough, my boy, and glad to be asked, as the old maid said.' "I'll tell you what it is," said Murphy; "boys, you must all dine with me to-day, and drink long life to me, since I'm not killed." "There are seventeen of us," said Durfy; "the little parlor won't hold us all."

"But isn't there a big room at the inn, Tom?" returned Murphy, "and not better drink in Ireland than Mrs. Fay's. What do you say, lads-one and all-will you dine with me?"

"Will a duck swim?" chuckled out Jack Horan, an oily veteran, who seldom opened his mouth but to put something into it, and spared his words as if they were of value; and to make them appear so, he spoke in apophthegms.

"What say you, James Reddy?" said Murtough. "Ready, sure enough, and willing, too!" answered James, who was a small wit, and made the aforesaid play upon his name at least three hundred and sixtyfive times every year.

"Oh, we'll all come," was uttered right and left. "Good men and true!" shouted Murphy; "won't we make the rafters shake, and turn the cellar inside out!

Whoo! I'm in great heart to-day. But who is this powdhering up the road? By the powers! 'tis the doctor, I think; 'tis-I know his bandy hat over the cloud of dust." The individual thus designated as the doctor now emerged from the obscurity in which he had been enveloped, and was received with a loud shout by the whole cavalcade as he approached them. Both parties drew rein, and the doctor, lifting from his head the my horse in my own stable, and I'll be up at the inn, loins, sir." aforesaid bandy hat, which was slouched over one eye, with a sinister droop, made a low obeisance to Murphy, and said, with a mock solemnity, "Your servant, sirso you're not killed?"

'No," said Murphy; "and you've lost a job which I see you came to look for; but you're not to have the carving of me yet."

had a great escape, signor," returned the doctor. late this time: so you must turn back and content your | the resources of her establishment, and more if she | Fir ment could never let him be quiet for a moment. The rest of the state of the st self with carving something more innocent than an atmust dine with me.

"Willingly, signor," said the docto; "but pray don't make use of the word 'cost.' I hate to hear it out of an attorney's mouth-or bill, I should say."

A laugh followed the doctor's pleasantry, but no smile appeared upon his countenance, for though uttering quaint and often very good, but oftener very bitter things, he never moved a muscle of his face, while others were shaking their sides at his sallies. He was, in more ways than one, a remarkable man. A massive head, large and rather protruding eyes, lank hair, dered him a pleasing friend or a dangerous enemy, as the case may be; though, to say the truth, friend and why is it so? If I may venture an opinion, it is that foe were treated with nearly equal severity, if a joke the action, as most likely some of the present company or a sarcasm tempted the assault. His own profession hated him, for he unsparingly ridiculed all stale practice, which his conviction led him to believe was inefficient, and he daringly introduced fresh, to the no small indignation of the more cut and dry portion of the faculty, for whose hate he returned contempt, of which he made no secret. From an extreme coarseness of manner, even those who believed in his skill were afraid to trust to his humor, and the dislike of his brother practitioners to meet him superadded to this, damaged his interest considerably, and prevented his being called in until extreme danger frightened patients, or their friends, into sending for Dr. Growling. His carelessness in dress, too, inspired disgust in the fair portion of the creation, and "snuffy" and "dirty," "savage" and > feared a hit would run the risk of an occasional thrust of the doctor's stiletto for the sake of enjoying the mangling he gave other people, and such rollicking fellows as Murphy, and Durfy, and Dawson, and Squire

Egan petted this social hedgehog. The doctor now turned his horse's head, and joined the cavalcade to the town. "I have blown my Rosinante," said he; "I was in such a hurry to see the

"Yes," said Murphy, "he smokes." "And his master takes snuff," said the doctor, suiting the action to the word. "I suppose, signor, you were thinking a little while ago that the squire might serve an ejectment on your vitality?"

"Or that in the trial between us I might get damages," said Murphy. "There is a difference in such case," said the doctor, "between a court of law and the court of honor, for in the former the man is plaintiff before he gets his damages, while in the latter it is after he gets his damages that he complains." "I'm glad my term is not ended, however," said Murphy. "If it had been," said the doctor, "I think you'd have had a long vacation in limbo.

"And suppose I had been hit," said Murphy, "you would have been late on the ground. You're a pretty friend!" "It's my luck, sir," said the doctor; "I'm always late for a job. By-the-by, I'll tell you an amusing fact of that musty piece of humanity, Miss Jinkins. Her niece was dangerously ill, and she had that licensed slaughterer, Killanmaul, trying to tinker her up, till the poor girl was past all hope, and then she seends for me. She swore, some time ago, I shall never darken her doors, but when she began to apprehend that death was rather a darker gentleman than I she tolerated my person. The old crocodile met me in the hall-by-the by, did you ever remark she's like a crocodile, only not with so pleasing an expression?—and wringing her hands she cried, 'Oh, doctor, I'll be bound to I won't do to prove my gratitude,' . 'Is she long I had been called in sooner, ma'am,' says -for, 'pon my conscience, Murphy, it is too ridiculous the way the people go on about me. I verily believe they think I can raise people out of their graves; and they call me in to repair the damages disease and the doctors have been making; and while the gentlemen in black silk stockings, with gold-headed canes, have been fobbing fees for three weeks, perhaps, they call in poor Jack Growling, who scorns Jack-a-dandyism, and he gets a solitary guinea for mending the bungling that cost something to the tune of twenty or thirty perhaps. And when I have plucked them from the jaws of death-regularly cheated the sexton out of themthe best word they have for me is to call me a pig, or abuse my boots, or wonder that the doctor is not more and this is the proudest day of my life." particular about his linen—the fools! But to return to my gentle crocodile. I was shown upstairs to the sick room, and there, sir, I saw the unfortunate girl, speechless, at the last gasp absolutely. The Killanmaul dandy had left her to die-absolutely given her up; and, then, indeed, I'm sent for! Well, I was in a rage, and was rushing out of the house, when the crocodile waylaid me in the hall. 'Oh, doctor, won't you do something for my Jemima?' 'I can't, ma'am, 'says I; 'but Mr. Fogarty can.' 'Mr. Fogarty!' says she. 'Yes ma'am,' kins-I'm a doctor, ma'am; but I suppose you took me for an undertaker!" "Well, you hit her hard, doctor," said Murphy. "Sir, you might as well hit a rhinoceros," returned the doctor. "When shall we dine?" asked Jack Horan. "As soon as Mrs. Fay can let us have the eatables, answered Murphy; "and, by-the-by, Jack, I leave the ordering of the dinner to you, for no man understands better how to do that same; besides, I want to leave after you, in a brace of shakes.' lived there rode to their own stables, and returned to region lay in the head." the party at Mrs. Fay's; while they who resided at a became a scene of bustle in all its departments from had them. So the Dinnys, and the Tims, and the torney to-day—though at an attorney's cost. You Mickeys, were rubbing down horses, cleaning knives, or drawing forth extra tables from their dusty repose; and the Biddys, and Judys, and Nellys, were washing up plates, scouring pans, and brightening up extra candlesticks, or doing deeds of doom in the poultryyard, where an audible commotion gave token of the premature deaths of sundry supernumerary chickens.

Murphy soon joined his guests, grinning from ear to ear, and rubbing his hands as he entered.

"Great news, boys," said he; "who do you think was at my house, when I got home, but M'Garry, with his head bandaged up, and his whole body, as he deslouching ears, a short neck, and broad shoulders, clares, bearing black and blue testimony to the mercirather inclined to stooping, a long body, and short legs, less attack of the bold O'Grady, against whom he slightly bowed, constituted his outward man; and a swears he'll bring an action for assault and battery. lemon-colored complexion, which a residence of some Now, boys, I thought it would be great fun to have him years in the East Indies had produced, did not tend to here to dinner—it's as good as a play to hear him deincrease his beauty. His mind displayed a superior in scribe the thrashing—so I asked him to come. He telligence, original views, contempt of received said he was not in a fit state to dine out; but I egged opinions, with a power of satire and ridicule which ren- him on by saying that a sight of him in his present plight would excite sympathy for him, and stir up public feeling against O'Grady, and that all would tell in might be on the jury, and would be the better able to judge how far he was entitled to damages, from witnessing the severity of the injury he had received. So he's coming; and mind, you must all be deeply affected at his sufferings, and impressed with the powerful description he gives of the same."

"Very scientific, of course," said old Growling. "Extensively so," returned Murphy; "he laid on the Latin heavy." "Yes-the fool!" growled the doctor; "he can't help sporting it even on me. I went into his shop one day, and asked for some opium wine, and he could not resist calling it vinum opii as he handed it to me."

"We'll make him a martyr!" cried Durfy. "We'll make him dhrunk!" said Jack Horan, "and "brute" were among the sweet words they applied to that will be better. He brags that he never was what he calls 'inebriated' in his life; and it will be great fun Nevertheless, those who loved a joke more than they to send him home on a door, with a note to his wife.

who is proud of his propriety." As they spoke, M'Garry entered, his head freshly bound up, to look as genteel as possible amongst the gentlemen with whom he was to have the honor of dining. His wife had suggested a pink ribbon, but M'Garry, while acknowledging his wife's superior taste, said black would look more professional. The odd fellows to whom he had now committed himself, crowded round him, and, in the most exaggerated phrases, implied the high sense they entertained of his wrongs and O'Grady's aggression.

"Unprovoked attack!" cried one. "Savage ruffian!" ejaculated another.

"What atrocity !" said a third. "What dignified composure!" added a fourth, in an audible whisper, meant for M'Garry's ear.

"Gentlemen!" said the apothecary, flurried at the extreme attention of which he became the object; "I beg to assure you I am deeply—that is—this proof of of-of-of symptoms-gentlemen-I mean sympathy, gentlemen-in short, I really-"

"The fact is," said Growling, "I see Mr. M'Garry is rather shaken in nerve-whether from loss of blood

"I have lost a quantity of blood, doctor," said M'Garry; "much vascular, to say nothing of extrava-"Which I'll state in my case," said Murphy.

"Murphy, don't interrupt," said Growling, who, with a very grave face, recommenced: "Gentlemen, from the cause already stated, I see Mr. M'Garry is not prepared to answer the outpouring of feeling with which you have greeted him, and if I might be permitted-" Every one shouted. "Certainly-certainly!"

"Then as I am permitted, I will venture to respond for Mr. M'Garry, and address you, as he would address you. In the words of Mr. M'Garry, I would say-Gentlemen—unaccustomed as I am "-Some smothered laughter followed this beginning; upon which the doctor, with a mock gravity, proceeded:

"Gentlemen, this interruption I consider to be an inyou forever!'-I hope not, thought I to myself. fringement on the liberty of the subject. I recom-Save my Jemima, doctor, and there's nothing mence, therefore, in the words of my honorable and wounded friend, and our honorable and wounded feelill, ma'am?' said I. 'A fortnight, doctor' 'I wish ings, and say, as my friend would say, or, to speak classically, M'Garry loquitur-"

The apothecary bowed his head to the bit of Latin, and the doctor continued:

"Gentlemen-unaccustomed to public thrashing, you can conceive what my feelings are at the present moment, in mind and body. [Bravo!] You behold an outrage [much confusion !] Shall an exaggerated savagery like this escape punishment, and 'the calm, sequestered vale' (as the poet calls it) of private life be ravaged with impunity? [Bravo, bravo]] Are the learned professions to be trampled under foot by barbarian ignorance and brutality? No; I read in the indignant looks of my auditory their high-souled answers. Gentlemen, your sympathy is better than diachylon to my wounds, Thunders of applause followed the doctor's address, and every one shook M'Garry's hand, till his bruised bones ached again. Questions poured upon him from all sides as to the nature and quantity of his drubbing, to all of which M'Garry innocently answered in terms of exaggeration, spiced with scientific phrases. Muscles, tendons, bones, and sinews were particularized with the precision of an anatomical demonstration; he swore he was pulverized, and paralyzed, and all the other lies he could think of.

"A large stick you say?" said Murphy.

says I. 'You have mistaken my profession, Miss Jin-"Sir! I never saw such a stick-'twas like a weaver's beam!" "I'll make a note of that," said Murphy. "A weaver's beam-'twill tell well with a jury.' "And beat you all over?" said Durfy. "From shoulder to flank, sir, I am one mass of welts and weals; the abrasures are extensive, the bruises terrific, particularly in the lumbar region.' "Where's that?" asked Jack Horan.

"The lumbar region is what is commonly called the

"Not always," said the doctor. "It varies in differ-The troop now approached the town. Those who ent subjects: I have known some people whose humber

"You laugh, gentlemen," said M'Garry, with a distance dismounted at the door of the inn, which soon | mournful smile; "but you know the doctor will be jocular." . He then continued to describe the various other this large influx of guests; and the preparation for the regions of his injuries, amidst the well-acted pity and "Considering it's so near Michaelmas, I think you've dinner, exceeding in scale what Mrs. Fay was generally indignation of the queer fellows who drew him out, ad a great escape, signor," returned the doctor. called upon to provide, except when the assizes, or until they were saturated, so far, with the fun of the "Sure enough," said Murphy, laughing; "but you're races, or other such cause of commotion, demanded all subject. After which, Murphy, whose restless termsuggested that they should divert themselves before dinner with a badger-fight.

"Isn't one fight a day enough for you, signor?" said the doctor.

"It is not every day we get a badger, you know," said Murphy; "and I heard just now from Tim the waiter that there is a horse-dealer lately arrived at the stables here, who has a famous one with him, and I know Reilly the butcher has two or three capital dogs, and there's a wicked mastiff below stairs, and I'll send for my 'buffer,' and we'll have some spanking sport." He led his guests then to the inn yard, and the horsedealer, for a consideration, allowed his badger to wage battle: the noise of the affair spread through the town, while they were making their arrangements, and sending right and left for dogs for the contest; and a pretty considerable crowd soon assembled at the place of action, where the hour before dinner was spent in the intellectual amusement of a badger-fight.

CHAPTER V.

THE fierce yells of the badger-fight, ringing far and wide, soon attracted a crowd, which continued to increase every minute by installments of men and boys. who might be seen running across a small field by the roadside, close to the scene of action, which lay at the back of the inn; and heavy-caped and skirted frieze coats streamed behind the full-grown, while the rags of the gossoons* fluttered in the race. Attracted by this evidence of "something going on," a horseman, who was approaching the town, urged his horse to speed, and turning his head toward a yawning double ditch the noble animal over the spanking leap.

of his name—the pure blood of that loyal race was in nurtured the poetic feeling with which his mind was gifted, and which found its vent in many a love-taught lyric, or touching ballad, or spirit-stirring song, whose theme was national glory. To him the bygone days of his country's history was dear, made more familiar by many an antique relic which hung around his own room in his father's house. Celt, and sword, and spear-head of Phœnician bronze, and golden gorget, and silver bodkin, and ancient harp, and studded crosier, were there; and these time-worn evidences of arts, and arms, and letters, flattered the affection with which he looked back on the ancient history of Ireland, and kept alive the ardent love of his country with which he glowed-a love too deep, too pure, to be likely to expire, even without the aid of such poetic sources of excitement. To him the names of Fitzgerald, and Desmond, and Tyrone, were dear; and there was no romantic legend of the humbler outlaws with which he was not familiar: and "Charley of the Horses," and "Ned of the Hill," but headed the list of names he loved to recall; and the daring deeds of bold spirits who held the hillside for liberty, were often given in words of poetic fire from the lips of Edward O'Connor. And yet Edward O'Connor went to see the badger-

fight.

There is something inherent in man's nature, urging him to familiarize himself with cruelty; and, perhaps, without such a power of witnessing savage deeds, he would be unequal to the dominion for which he was designed. Men of the highest order of intellect the world has known have loved the chase. How admirably Scott displays this tendency of noble minds, in the meeting of Ellen with her father-when Douglas says:

"The chase I followed far; "Tis mimicry of noble war."

And the effect of this touch of character is hightened by Douglas in a subsequent scene-Douglas, who could enjoy the sport which ends in death, bending over his gentle child, and dropping tears of the tenderest affection-tears which "Would not stain an angel's cheek."

Superadded to this natural tendency, Edward O'Connor had an additional motive. He lived among a society of sporting men, less cultivated than he was, whose self-esteem would have easily ignited the spark of jealousy if he had seemed to scorn the things which made their principal enjoyment, and formed the chief occupation of their lives; and his good sense and good heart (and there is an intimate connection between them) pointed out to him that, wherever your lot is east, duty to yourself and others suggests the propriety of adapting your conduct to the circumstances in which you are placed (so long as morality and decency are not violated), and that the manifestation of one's own superiority may render the purchase too dear, by being bought at the terrible price of our neighbor's dislike. He, therefore, did not tell everybody he wrote verses: he kept the gift as secret as he could. If an error, however gross, on any subject, were made in his presence, he never took willing notice of it: or if circumstances obliged him to touch upon it, it was always done with a politeness and tact that afforded the blunderer the means of retreat. If some gross historical error, for instance, happened to be committed in a conversation with himself (and then only), he would set the mistake right, as a matter of conscience, but he would do so by saying there was a great similarity between the event spoken of and some other event. "I know what you are thinking of," he would say, "but you make a slight mistake in the dates; the two stories are very similar, and likely to mislead one."

But with all this modest reserve, did the least among his companions think him the less clever? No. It was shrewdly suspected he was a poet; it was well known he was highly educated and accomplished; and yet Edward O'Connor was a universal favorite, bore the character of being a "real fine fellow," and was loved and respected by the most illiterate of the young men of the country; who, in allusion to his extensive lore on the subject of the legendary heroes of the romantic history of Ireland, his own Christian name, and his immediate place of residence, which was near a wild mountain pass, christened him "Ned of the Hill." His appearance amidst the crowd assembled to witness the rude sport was hailed with pleasure-varying branch of the profession; pharmacopolists, instead of from the humble but affectionate respect of the peasant, who cried "Long life to you, Misther O'Connor," to the hearty burst of equality, which welcomed him as "Ned of the Hill."

O LAKE PRO

The fortune of the fight favored the badger, who proved himself a trump; and Murphy appreciated his worth so highly that, when the battle was over, he would not quit the ground until he became his owner, at a high price to the horse-dealer. His next move was to insist on Edward O'Connor dining with him; and Edward, after many excuses to avoid the party he foresaw would be a drinking bout-of which he had a special horror, notwithstanding all his tolerationyielded to the entreaties of Murphy, and consented to be his guest, just as Tim the waiter ran np, steaming from every pore, to announce that the dinner was "ready to be sarved."

"Then sarve it, sir," said Murphy, "and sarve it right."

Off cantered Tim, steaming and snorting like a locomotive engine, and the party followed to the inn, where a long procession of dish-bearers was ascending the stairs to the big room, as Murphy and his friends entered.

The dinner it is needless to describe One dinner is the same as another in the most essential points, namely, to satisfy hunger and slake consequent thirst; and whether beef and cabbage, and heavy wet, are to conquer the dragon of appetite, or your stomach is to sustain the more elaborate attack fired from the batterie de cuisine of a finished artiste, and moistened with champagne, the difference is only of degree in the fashion of the thing and the tickling of the palate: that divided the road from the field, he gracefully rode hunger is as thoroughly satisfied with the one as the other; and head-aches manufactured out of the beauti-The rider was Edward O'Connor; and he was worthy ful, bright, and taper glasses which bear the foam of France to the lip, as from the coarse, flat-bottomed his heart, which never harbored a sentiment that could | tumblers of an inn that reek with punch. At the dinner do it dishonor, and overflowed with feelings which en- there was the same tender solicitude on the part of the noble human nature, and make us proud of our kind. | carvers as to "Where you would like it!" and the same He was young and handsome; and as he sat upon his | carelessness on the part of those whom they quesmettled horse, no lady could deny that Edward O'Con- tioned, who declared they had no choice, "but if there nor was the very type of the gallant cavalier. Though | was a little bit near the shank," etc., or "if there was a attached to every manly sport and exercise, his mind liver wing to spare." By the way, some carvers there was of a refined order; and a youth passed amidst are who push an aspirant's patience too far. I have books and some of the loveliest scenery in Ireland had seen some who, after giving away both wings, and all the breast, two sidebones, and the short legs, meet the eager look of the fifth man on their left with a smile, and ask him with an effrontery worthy of the Old Bailey, "Has he any choice?" and, at the same time, toss a drum-stick on the destined plate, or boldly attempt to divert his melancholy with a merry-thought. All this, and more, was there at Murtough Murphy's dinner, long memorable in the country from a frolic that wound up the evening, which soon began to warm, after the cloth was removed, into the sort of a thing commonly known by the name of a jollification. But before the dinner was over, poor M'Garry was nearly pickled: Jack Horan, having determined to make him drunk, arranged a system of attack on M'Garry's sobriety which bade defiance to his prudence to withstand. It was agreed that every one should ask the apothecary to take wine; and he, poor innocent man! when gentlemen whom he had never had the honor to meet at dinner before addressed him with a winning smile, and said, "Mr. M'Garry, will you do me the honor?" could not do less than fill his glass every time; so that, to use Jack Horan's own phrase, the apothecary was "sewed up" before he had any suspicion of the fact; and, unused to the indications of approaching vinous excitement, he supposed it was the delightful society made him so hilarious, and he began to launch forth after dinner in a manner quite at variance with the reserve he usually maintained in the presence of his superiors, and talked largely. Now, M'Garry's principal failing was to make himself appear very learned in his profession; and every new discovery in chemistry; operation in surgery, or scientific experiment he heard of, he was prone to shove in, head and shoulders, in his soberest moments; but now that he was half-drunk, he launched forth on the subject of galvanism, having read of some recent wonderful effects produced on the body of a recent murderer who was hanged and given over to the College of Surgeons in Dublin. To impress the company still more with a sense of his learning, he addressed Growling on the subject, and the doctor played him off to advantage.

"Don't you think it very wonderful, doctor?" inquired M'Garry, speaking somewhat thickly. "Very," answered the doctor, dryly.

"They say, sir, the man-that is, the subject-when under the influence of the battery, absolutely twiddled his left foot, and raised his right arm."

"And raised it to some purpose, too," said the doctor: "for he raised a contusion on the Surgeon-General's eye, having hit him over the same."

"Dear me!-I did not hear that." "It is true, however," said the doctor; "and that gives you an idea of the power of the galvanic influence, for you know the Surgeon-General is a powerful man, and yet he could not hold him down." "Wonderful!" hiccupped M'Garry.

"But that's nothing to what happened in London," continued the doctor. "They experimented there the other day with a battery of such power, that the man who was hanged absolutely jumped up, seized a scalpel from the table, and making a rush on the assembled Faculty of London, cleared the theater in less than no time; dashed into the hall; stabbed the porter who attempted to stop him; made a chevy down the South side of Leicester Square; and as he reached the corner, a woman, who was carrying tracts published by the Society for the Suppression of Vice, shrieked at beholding a man in so startling a condition, and fainted! he, with a presence of mind perfectly admirable, whipped the cloak from her back, and threw it round him, and scudding through the tortuous alleys which abound in that neighborhood, made his way to the house where the learned Society of Noviomagians hold their convivial meetings, and, telling the landlord that he was invited there to dinner as a curiosity, he gained admittance, and, it is supposed, took his opportunity for escaping, for he has not since been heard "Good heavens!" gasped M'Garry; " and do you believe that, doctor?" "Most firmly, sir! My belief is, that galvanism is, in fact, the original principle of vitality."

"Should we not rejoice, doctor," cried M'Garry, " at this triumph of science?"

"I don't think you should, Mr. M'Garry," said the doctor, gravely; " for it would utterly destroy your compounding medicine, must compound with their creditors; they are utterly ruined, Mercury is no longer in the ascendant; all doctors have to do now is to carry a small battery about them, a sort of galvanic pocket-pistol, I may say, and restore the vital principle by its application."

"You are not serious, doctor?" said M'Garry, becoming very serious, with that wise look so peculiar to drunken men.

"Never more serious in my life, sir."

"That would be dreadful," said M'Garry. "Shocking, you mean," said the doctor.

"Leave off your confounded scientifics, there, ' shouted Murphy from the head of the table, "and let us have a song."

"I can't sing, indeed, Mister Murphy," said M'Garry, who became more intoxicated every moment; for he continued to drink, having overstepped the boundary which custom had prescribed to him.

"I didn't ask you, man," said Murphy; "but my darling fellow, Ned here, will gladden our hearts and ears with a stave."

"Bravo!" was shouted round the table, trembling under the "thunders of applause" with which heavy hands made it ring again, and "Ned of the Hill!" "Ned of the Hill!" was vociferated with many a hearty cheer about the board that might indeed be called "festive."

"Well," said O'Connor, "since you call upon me in the name of Ned of the Hill, I'll give you a song under that very title Here's Ned of the Hill's own shout;" and in a rich manly voice he sung, with the fire of a bard, these lines:

THE SHOUT OF NED OF THE HILL.

The hill! the hill!, with its sparkling rill, And its dawning air so light and pure, Where the morning's eye scorns the mists that lie

On the drowsy valley and the moor. Here, with the eagle, I rise betimes; Here, with the eagle, my state I keep; The first we see of the morning sun,

And his last as he sets o'er the deep, And there, while strife is rife below, Here from the tyrant I am free; Let shepherd slaves the valley praise, But the hill! the hill for me!

The baron below in his castle dwells, And his garden boasts the costly rose; But mine is the keep of the mountain steep, Where the matchless wild flower freely blows. Let him fold his sheep, and his harvest reap-

I look down from my mountain throne; And I choose and pick of the flock and the rick, And what is his I can make my own. Let the valley grow in its wealth below

And the lord keep his high degree; But higher am I in my liberty-The hill! the hill for me!

O'Connor's song was greeted with what the music publishers are pleased to designate, on their title-pages, "distinguished applause;" and his "health and song" were filled to and drank with enthusiasm.

"Whose lines are those?" asked the doctor. "I don't know," said O'Connor.

"That's as much as to say they are your own," said Growling. "Ned, don't be too modest-it is the worst fault a man can have who wants to get on in this world."

"The call is with you, Ned," shouted Murphy from the head of the table; "knock some one down for a

"Mr. Reddy, I hope, will favor us," said Edward. with a courteous inclination of his head toward the gentleman he named, who returned a very low bow, with many protestations that he would "do his best," etc.; "but after Mr. O'Connor, really,"-and this was said with a certain self-complacent smile, indicative of his being on very good terms with himself. Now, James Reddy wrote rhymes-bless the mark!-and was tolerably well convinced that, except Tom Moore (if he did except even him), there was not a man in the British dominions his equal at a lyric. He sung, too, with a kill-me-quite air, as if no lady could resist his strains; and to "give effect," as he called it, he began every stanza as loud as he could, and finished it in a gentle murmur-tailed it off very taper, indeed; in short, it seemed as if a shout had been suddenly smitten with consumption, and died in a whisper. And this, his style, he never varied, whatever the nature or expression of the song might be, or the sense to be expressed; but as he very often sung his own, there were seldom any to consider. This rubbish he had set to music by the country music-master, who believed himself to be a better composer than Sir John Stevenson, to whom the prejudices of the world gave the palm; and he eagerly caught at the opportunity which the verses and vanity of Reddy afforded him, of stringing his crotchets and quavers on the same hank with the abortive fruits of Reddy's muse, and the wretched productions hung worthily together. Reddy, with the proper quantity of "hems and haws," and rubbing down his upper lip and chin with his forefinger and thumb, cleared his throat, tossed his nose into the air, and said he was going to give the "a little classic thing.' "Just look at the puppy!" snarled out old Growling to his neighbor: "he's going to measure us out some yards of his own fustian, I'm sure-he looks so pleased." Reddy gave his last "a-hem!" and sung what he called

THE LAMENT OF ARIADNE. The graceful Greek, with gem-bright hair, Her garments rent, and rent the air;

"What a tearing rage she was in!" said of I Growling, in an under-tone.

> With sobs and sighs And tearfuleyes. Like fountain fair of Helicon!

"Oh, thunder and lightning!" growled the doctor, who pulled a letter out of his pocket, and began to scribble on the blank portions of it, with the stump of a blunt pencil, which he very audibly sucked, to enable it to make a mark.

> For ah, her lover false was gone! The fickle brave, And fickle wave,

"And pickled cabbage," said the doctor.

Combined to cheat the fickle fair. Oh, fickle! fickle! fickle!

But the brave should be true, And the fair ones too-True, true, As the ocean's blue! And Ariadne had not been, Deserted there, like beauty's queen. Oh, Ariadne!-adne!-adne!

"Beautiful!" said the doctor, with an approving nod at Reddy, who continued his song, while the doctor continued to write.

The sea-nymphs round the sea-girt shore Mocked the maiden's sighs; And the ocean's savage roar Replies-

Replies—replies, replies, replies.
(After the manner of "Tell me where is fancy bred.")

"Very original!" said the doctor.

With willow wand Upon the strand She wrote, with trembling heart and hand, "The brave should ne'er Desert the fair." But the wave the moral washed away, Ah, well-a-day! well-a-day!

Reddy smiled and bowed, and thunders of applause followed, the doctor shouted "Splendid!" several times, and continued to write and take snuff vociferously, by which those who knew him could comprehend he was bent on mischief.

"What a beautiful thing that is!" said one.

A-day !-a-day !-a-day !

"Whose is it?" said another. "A little thing of my own," answered Reddy, with a smile.

"I thought so," said Murphy. "By Jove, James, you are a genius!"

"Nonsense!" smiled the poet; "just a little classic trifle—I think them little classic allusions is pleasing in general—Tommy Moore is very happy in his classic allusions, you may remark-not that I, of course, mean to institute a comparison between so humble an individual as myself and Tommy Moore, who has so well been called 'the poet of all circles, and the idol of his own; and if you will permit me, in a kindred spirit-I hope I may say the kindred spirit of a song—in that kindred spirit I propose his health—the health of Tommy Moore!"

"Don't say Tommy!" said the doctor, in an irascible tone; "call the man Tom, sir; -with all my heart, Tom MOORE!"

The table took the word from Jack Growling, and "Tom Moore," with all the honors of "hip and hurra!" rung round the walls of the village inn-and where is the village in Ireland that health has not been hailed with the flery enthusiasm of the land whose lays he has "wedded to immortal verse,"—the land which is proud of his birth, and holds his name in honor?

There is a magic in a great name; and in this instance that of Tom Moore turned the current from where it was setting, and instead of quizzing the nonsense of the fool who had excited their mirth, every one Junched forth in praise of their native bard, and souplets from his favorite songs ran from lip to lip.

"Come, Ned of the Hill," said Murphy, "sing us one of his songs-I know you have them all as pat as your prayers."

"And says them oftener," said the doctor, who still continued scribbling over the letter.

Edward, at the urgent request of many, sung that most exquisite of the melodies, "And doth not a meeting like this make amends?" and long rung the plaudits, and rapidly circulated the bottle, at its conclusion.

"We'll be the 'Alps in the sunset,' my boys," said Murphy; "and here's the wine to enlighten us! But what are you about there, doctor?—is it a prescription you are writing?"

"No. Prescriptions are written in Latin, and this is a bit of Greek I'm doing. Mr. Reddy has inspired me with a classic spirit, and if you will permit me, I'll volunteer a song [bravo! bravo!] and give you another version of the subject he has so beautifully treated only mine is not so heart-breaking."

The doctor's proposition was received with cheers, and after he had gone through the mockery of clearing his throat, and pitching his voice after the usual manner of your would-be fine singer, he gave out, to the tune of a well-known rollicking Irish lilt, the following burlesque version of the subject of Reddy's song:

LOVE AND LIQUOR. A GREEK ALLEGORY.

OH, sure 'twould amaze yiz How one Misther Theseus Desarted a lovely young lady of owld. On a dissolute island, All lonely and silent, the sobbed herself sick as she sat in the cowld. Oh. you'd think she was kilt, As she roar'd with the quilt

Wrapp'd round her in haste as she jumped out of bed. And ran down to the coast,

Where she looked like a ghost, Though 'twas he was departed—the vagabone fled And she cried, "Well-a-day!

Sure my heart it is gray: They're deceivers, them sojers, that goes on half-pay."

Whilst abusing the villain, Came riding postilion A nate little boy on the back of a baste, Big enough, faith, to ate him, But he lather'd and bate him, And the baste to unsate him ne'er struggled the laste;

And an iligant car He was dhrawing-by gar! It was finer by far than a Lord Mayor's state coach, And the chap that was in it

He sung like a linnet, With a nate kag of whisky beside him to broach. And he tipped now and then

Just a matter o' ten Or twelve tumblers o' punch to his bold sarving-men.

They were dress'd in green livery. But seem'd rather shivery, For 'twas only a trifle o' leaves that they wore; But they caper'd away Like the sweeps on May-day, And shouted and tippled the tumblers galore.

Now Bacchus perceiving The lady was grieving. He spoke to her civil, and tipp'd her a wink; And the more that she fretted. He soother'd and petted,

A print of their masther

Is often in plasther

O' Paris, put over the door of a tap;

A bottle to crack us,

A fine chubby fellow,

Ripe, rosy, and mellow,

Like aspeach that is ready to drop in your lap.

He's a friend of the people, like bowld Caius Gracchus,

Hurrah! for brave Bacchus,

And gave her a glass her own health just to drink; Her pulse it beat quicker. The thrifle o' liquor Enliven'd her sinking heart's cockles, I think;

So the MORAL is plain, That if love gives you pain,

There's nothing can cure it like taking to dhrink!

Uproarious were the "bravos" which followed the doctor's impromptu; the glasses overflowed, and were emptied to his health and song, as laughing faces nodded to him round the table. The doctor sat seriously rocking himself in his chair backward and forward, to meet the various duckings of the beaming faces about him; for every face beamed but one-and that was the unfortunate M'Garry's. He was most deplorably drunk, and began to hold on by the table. At last he contrived to shove back his chair and get on his legs; and making a sloping stagger toward the wall, contrived by its support to scramble his way to the door. There he balanced himself as well as he could by the handle of the lock, which chance, rather than design, enabled him to turn, and the door suddenly opening, poor M'Garry made a rush across the landing-place, and, stumbling against an opposite door, would have fallen, had he not supported himself by the lock of that also, which, again yielding to his heavy tugs, opened, and the miserable wretch making another plunge forward, his shins came in contact with the rail of a very low bed, and into it he fell head foremost, totally unable to rise, and after some heavy grunts, he sunk into a profound sleep.

In this state he was discovered soon after by Murphy, whose inventive faculty for frolic instantly suggested how the apothecary's mishap might be made the foundation of a good practical joke. Murtough went down stairs, and procuring some blacking and red pickled cabbage by stealth, returned to the chamber where M'Garry now lay in a state of stupor, and dragging off his clothes, he made long dabs across his back with the purple juice of the pickle and Warren's paste, till poor M'Garry was as regularly striped as a tiger, from his shoulder to his flank. He then returned to the dinnerroom, where the drinking bout had assumed a formidable character, and others, as well as the apothecary, began to feel the influence of their potations. Murphy confided to the doctor what he had done, and said that, when the men were drunk enough, he would contrive that M'Garry should be discovered, and then they would take their measures accordingly. It was not very long before his company were ripe enough for his designs, and then ringing the bell, he demanded of the waiter, when he entered, what had become of Mr. M'Garry. The waiter, not having any knowledge on the subject, was desired to inquire, and, a search being instituted, M'Garry was discovered by Mrs. Fay in the state Murphy had left him in. On seeing him, she was so terrified that she screamed, and ran into the dinnerroom, wringing her hands, and shouting "Murder." A great commotion ensued, and a general rush to the bedroom took place, and exclamations of wonder and horror flew round the room, not only from the gentlemen of the dinner-party, but from the servants of the house, who crowded to the chamber on the first alarm, and helped not a little to increase the confusion.

"Oh! who ever see the like of it!" shouted Mrs. Fay. "He's kilt with the batin' he got! Oh, look at himblack and blue all over! Oh, the murther it is! Oh, I wouldn't be Squire O'Grady for all his fort'n."

"Gad, I believe he's killed, sure enough," Murphy. "What a splendid action the widow will have!" said

Jack Horan. "You forget, man," said Murphy, "this is not a case for action of damages, but a felony-hanging matter." "Sure enough," said Jack.

"Doctor, will you feel his pulse?" said Murphy. The doctor did as he was required, and assumed a very serious countenance. "'Tis a bad business, sir-his wounds are mortifying already," Upon this announcement, there was a general retreat from the bed, round which they had been crowding too close for the carrying on of the joke; and Mrs. Fay ran them, to fumigate the room.

tor, with imperturbable gravity. "That villainous smoke is choking me," said Jack Horan. "Better that, sir, than have a pestilence in the house," said Growling.

"I'll leave the place," said Jack Horan.

"And I, too," said Doyle. mind," "Gentlemen!" said Murphy, shutting the door, "you must not quit the house. I must have an inquest on the body." "An inquest!" they all exclaimed.

"Yes—an inquest." "But there's no coroner here," said Reddy. "No matter for that," said Murphy. under-sheriff of the county, can preside at this inquiry.

Gentlemen, take your places; bring in more lights, Mrs. Fay. Stand round the bed, gentlemen." "Not too close, said the doctor. "Mrs. Fay, bring more vinegar."

Mrs. Fay had additional candles and more vinegar introduced, and the drunken fellows were standing as straight as they could, each with a candle in his hand, round the still prostrate M'Garry.

Murphy then opened on them with a speech, and called in every one in the house to ask did they know anything about the matter; and it was not long before it was spread all over the town, that Squire O'Grady had killed M'Garry, and that the coroner's inquest brought in a verdict of murder, and that the squire was locks-your mouth's as hard as a paving-stone, you brute! going to be sent to jail.

on for nearly half an hour, when the cold arising from his want of clothes, and the riot about him, and the fumes of the vinegar, roused M'Garry, who turned on the bed and opened his eyes. There he saw a parcel of people standing round him, with candles in their hands, and countenances of drunken wonder and horror.

He uttered a hollow groan, and cried: "Save us and keep us! where am I?"

"Retire, gentlemen," said the doctor, waving his hand authoritatively; "retire—all but the under-sheriff." Murphy cleared the room, and shut the door, while M'Garry still kept exclaiming, "Save us and keep us! where am I? What's this? Oh Lord!"

"You're dead!" said Murphy; "and the coroner's inquest has just sat on you!"

"Dead!" cried M'Garry, with a horrified stare. "Dead!" repeated the doctor, solemnly.

"Are you not Doctor Growling?" "You see the effect, Mr. Murphy," said the doctor, not noticing M'Garry's question—"you see the effect of the process."

Wonderful!" said Murphy. "Preserve us!" cried the bewildered apothecary. "How could I know you if I was dead, doctor Oh, doctor dear, sure I'm not dead?"

"As a herring," said the doctor. "Lord have mercy on me! Oh, Mr. Murphy, sure I'm not dead?"

"You're dead, sir," said Murphy; "the doctor has only galvanized you for a few moments."

"Oh, Lord!" groaned M'Garry. "Doctor-indeed, "You are in a state of temporary animation," said the doctor. "I do feel very odd, indeed," said the terrified man, putting his hands to his throbbing temples. "How long am I dead?"

"A week next Tuesday," said the Doctor. "Galvanism has preserved you from decomposition." M'Garry uttered a heavy groan, and looked up piteously at his two torrienters. Murphy, fearful the shock might drive him out of his mind, said, "Perhaps, doctor, you can preserve his life altogether: you have kept him alive so long?"

"I'll try," said Growling; "hand me that tumbler." Murphy handed him a tumbler full of water, and the doctor gave it to M'Garry, and desired him to try and drink it; ne put it to his lips and swallowed a little

"Can you taste it?" asked the doctor.

"Isn't it water?" said M'Garry. "You see how dull the nerves are yet," said Growling to Murphy; "that's aquafortis and assafcetida, and he can't taste it; we must give him another touch of the battery. Hold him up, while I go into the next room, and immerse the plates."

The doctor left the bed-room, and came back with a hot poker and some lemon-juice and water.

"Turn him gently round," said he to Murphy, " while I conduct the wires." His order was obeyed; and giving M'Garry a touch of the hot poker, the apothecary roared like a bull. "That did him good!" said Growling. "Now try, can you taste anything?" and he gave him the lemon-Juice and water.

"I taste a slight acid, doctor dear," said M'Garry, hopefully. "You see what that last touch did," said Growling, gravely; "but the palate is still feeble; that's nearly pure nitric." "Oh, dear!" said M'Garry," " is it nitric?"

"You see his hearing is coming back too," said the doctor to Murphy. "Try can he put his legs under

They raised the apothecary from the bed; and when he staggered and fell forward, he looked horrified. "Oh, dear! I can't walk. I'm afraid I am-I am no more!"

"Don't despair," said the doctor; "I pledge my professional reputation to save you now, since you can stand at all, and your senses are partly restored. Let him lie down again; try could he sleep-"

"Sleep!" said M'Garry, with horror; "perhaps never to awaken!"

"I'll keep up the galvanic influence-don't be afraidsaid depend upon me-there, lie down. Can you shut your eyes? Yes, I see you can: don't open them so fast. Try, can you keep them shut? Don't open them till I tell you—wait till I count two hundred and fifty. That's right-turn a little more round-keep your eyes fast; that's it. One-two-three-four-five-six-seven;" and so he went on, making a longer interval between every number, till the monotonous sound, and the closed eye of the helplessly drunken man, produced the effect desired by the doctor; and the heavy snoring of the apothecary soon bore witness that he slept.

We hope it is not necessary to assure our fair readers that Edward O'Connor had nothing to do with this scene of drunken absurdity. No: long before the evenfor a shovel of hot cinders, and poured vinegar over ing's proceedings had assumed the character of a regular drunken bout, he had contrived to make his "A very proper precaution, Mrs. Fay," said the doc- escape, his head only sufficiently excited to increase his sentimentality; so, instead of riding home direct, he took a round of some eight miles, to have a look at Merryvale, for there dwelt Fanny Dawson-the Darling Fanny Dawson, sister to Dick, whose deviltry was more than redeemed in the family by the angelic sweetness of his lovely and sportive sister. For the present, however, poor Edward O'Connor was not allowed to address "And I," said Reddy; "'tis disgusting to a sensitive Fanny; but his love for her knew no abatement notwithstanding; and to see the place where she dwelt had for him a charm. There he sat in his saddle, at the gate, looking up the long line of old trees through which the cool moonlight was streaming; and he fancied that Fanny's foot had trodden that avenue perhaps a few hours before, and even that gave him pleasure: for to those who love with the fond enthusiasm of Edward O'Connor, the very vacancy where the loved one has been is sacred.

The horse pawed impatiently to be gone, and Edward reined him up with a chiding voice; but the animal continuing restless, Edward's apostrophes to his mistress, and warnings to his horse, made an odd mixture; and we would recommend gentlemen, after their second bottle, not to let themselves be overheard in their lovefits; for even as fine a fellow as Edward O'Connor is likely to be ridiculous under such circumstances.

"Oh, Fanny!" cried Edward, "my adored Fanny!"then to his horse, " Be quiet, you brute!-My love, my angel!-you devil, I'll thrash you, if you don't be quiet!-though separated from me, you are always present to my mind; your bright eyes, your raven -Oh, Fanny! if fate be ever propitious-should I be This almost incredible humbug of Murphy's had gone blessed with the divine possession of your charms, you should then know-what a devil you ere!-you should then know the tenderest care. I'll guard you, caress you, fondle you-I'll bury my spurs in you, you devil!-Oh, Fanny! beloved one-farewell-good-night-a thousand blessings on you'-and now go and be hanged to you / " said he, bitterly, putting his spurs to his horse and galloping home.

When the doctor was satisfied that M'Garry was fast asleep, he and Murphy left the room, and locked the door. They were encountered on the lobby by : everal curious people, who wanted to know, "was the man dead?" The doctor shook his head very gravely, and said "Not quite;" while Murphy, with a serious nod, said, "All over, I'm afraid, Mrs. Fay;" for he perceived among the persons on the lobby a servant of O'Grady's, who chanced to be in the town, and was all wonder and fright at the news of his master having committed murder. Murphy and the doctor proceeded to the dinner-room, where they found the drunken men wrangting about what verdict they should bring in, and a discursive dispute touching on "murder," and "manslaughter," and "accidental death," and "the visitation of God," mingled with noisy toasts and flowing cups, until any sagacity the company ever possessed was sacrificed to the rosy god.

The lateness of the hour, and the state of the company, rendered riding home impossible to most of them; so Mrs. Fay was called upon to prepare beds. The inn did not afford a sufficiency of beds to accommodate every gentleman with a single one, so a toss-up was resorted to, to decide who should sleep double. The fortune of war east the unfortunate James Reddy upon the doctor, who, though one of the few who were capable of self-protection, preferred remaining at the inn to riding home some miles. Now James Reddy, though very drunk indeed, had sense enough left to dislike the lot that fate had cast him. To sleep with such a slovenly man as the doctor shocked James, who was a bit of a dandy. The doctor seemed perfectly contented with the arrangement; and as he bade Murphy "goodnight," a lurking devilment hung about his huge mouth. All the men staggered off, or were supported, to their various beds, but one-and he could not stir from the loor, where he lay bugging the leg of the table. To every effort to disturb him he replied with an imploring grunt, to "let him alone," and he hugged the leg of the lable closer, exclaiming, "I won't leave you, Mrs. Fay -my darling Mrs. Fay! rowl your arms around me, Mrs. Fay!"

"Ah, get up and go to bed, Misther Doyle," said Tim. "Sure the misthress is not here at all."

"I know she's not," said Doyle. "Who says a word against her?"

"Sure you're talking to her yourself, sir."

'Pooh, pooh, man!-you're dhrunk." "Ah, come to bed, Misther Doyle," said Tim, in an imploring tone. "Och sure, my heart's broke with you."

"Don't say your heart's broke, my sweet landlady -my darling Mrs. Fay! the apple of my eye you are."

"Nonsense, Misther Doyle.

"True as the sun, moon, and stars. Apple of my eye, did I say?-I'd give the apples of my eyes to make sauce for the cockles of your heart. Mrs. Fay, darling, ton't be coy. Ha! I have you fast!" and he gripped the table closer.

"Well, you are dhrunk, Misther Doyle," said Tim. "I hope my breath is not offensive from drink, Mrs. 'ay," said Doyle, in an amatory whisper to the leg of the table. companying the exclamation with a good shake, which somewhat roused the prostrate form,

"Who's there?" as a pig-"

"Dare not wound her fame! Who says a word of Mrs. Fay?"

"False villain! Whist, my darling," said he to the slumber.

leg of the table; "I'll never betray you. Hug me tight, Mrs. Fay!"

"Bad luck to the care I'll take any more about you," said Tim. "Sleep on the flure, if you like." And Doyle | newly dug esculent at the door, and replacing the spade of Mrs. Fay's mahogany embraces.

he remembered for many days after. In fact, had James | blue striped tick which hung at her side. been left to his choice, he would rather have slept with the house-dog than with the doctor; but he dreaded for some wather to wash the pratees, while I get the the consequences of letting old Jack perceive his an- pot ready for bilin' them; it wants scourin', for the pig lipathy; and visions of future chastisement from the was atin' his dinner out iv it, the craythur!" doctor's satirical tongue awed him into submission to Off went Oonah with her pail, which she soon filled the present punishment. He sneaked into bed, there- from the clear spring; and placing the vessel on her fore, and his deep potations insured him immediate head, walked back to the cabin with that beautiful : leep, from which he awoke, however, in the middle of erect form, free step, and graceful swaying of the figthe night in torture, from the deep scratches inflicted ure, so peculiar to the women of Ireland and the East, upon him by every kick of old Growling. At last poor from their habit of carrying weights upon the head. Reddy could stand it no longer, and the earliest hour of | The potatoes were soon washed; and as they got their dawn revealed him to the doctor putting on his clothes, swearing like a trooper at one moment, and at the next | work let the moisture drain from them, up came Larry apostrophizing the genius of gentility. "What it is to Hogan, who, being what is called a "civil-spoken have to do with a person that is not a gentleman!" he | man " addressed Mrs. Rooney in the following agreeaexclaimed, as he pulled on one leg of his trowsers. "What is the matter with you?" asked old Jack from the bed.

"The matter, sir, is that I'm going." "Is it at this hour! Tut, man, don't be a fool. Get into bed again."

"Never, sir, with you at least. I have seldom slept two in a bed, Dr. Growling, for my gentlemanly habits forbid it; but when circunistances have obliged me, it has been with gentlemen-gentlemen, doctor," and he laid a stress on the word-"gentlemen, sir, who cut their toe-nails. Sir, I am a serious sufferer by your coarse habits; you have scratched me, sir, nearly to death. I am one gore of blood-"

"Tut, man! 'twas not my nails that scratched you; it was only my spurs I put on going to bed, to keep you at a distance from me; you were so disgustingly drunk, my gentleman !- look there!" and he poked his leg out of bed, and there, sure enough, Reddy saw a spur buckled; and dumb-foundered at this evidence of the doctor's atrocity, he snatched up his clothes and rushed from the room, as from the den of a bear. Murphy twisted a beneficial result to M'Garry out of the night's riotous frolic at his expense; for in the but when the breath is out of it the spark dies, and then morning, taking advantage of the report of the inquest it grows cowld like a Christian; and isn't it a pleasant which he knew must have reached Neck-or-Nothing Hall, he made a communication to O'Grady, so equivocally worded that the Squire fell into the trap. The note ran as follows:

"SIR-You must be aware that your act of yesterday has raised a strong feeling in the country against you, and that so flagrant a violation of the laws cannot fail to be visited with terrible severity upon you; for, though your position in rank places you far above the condition of the unfortunate man on whom you wreaked your vengeance, you know, sir, that in the eye of the law you are equal, and the Under these circumstances, sir, considering the awful consequences of your ungoverned rage (which, I doubt not, now you deplore), I would suggest to you by a timely offer of compromise, in the shape of a handsome sum of money -say two hundred pounds-to lull the storms which must otherwise burst on your devoted head, and save your name from dishonor. I anxiously await your answer, as proceedings must instantly commence, and the law take its course, unless Mrs. M'Garry can be pacified.
"I have the bonor to be, sir,

"Your most obedient servant, "MURTOUGH MURPHY. "To Gustavus Granby O'Grady, Esq., Neck-or-Nothing Hall."

O'Grady was thoroughly frightened; and strange as it may appear, did believe he could compromise for killing only a plebeian; and actually sent Murphy his note of hand for the sum demanded. Murtough posted off to M'Garry; he and his wife received him with shouts of indignation, and heaped reproaches on his head, for the trick he had played on the apothecary.

"Oh! Misther Murphy-never look me in the face again!" said Mrs. M'Garry, who was ugly enough to make the request quite unnecessary; "to send my husband home to me a beast!"

"Striped like a tiger!" said M'Garry.

"Blacking and pickled cabbage, Misther Murphy!" said the wife. "Oh fie, sir!-I did not think you could be so low."

"Galvanism!" said M'Garry, furiously. "My professional honor wounded!"

"Whisht, whisht, man!" said Murphy; "there's a fluer plaister than any in your shop for the cure of wounded honor. Look at that!"-and he handed him the note for two hundred; "there's galvanism for you!" "What is this?" said M'Garry, in amazement.

"The result of last night's inquest," said Murphy. "You have got your damages without a trial; so pocket your money, and be thankful."

The two hundred pounds at once changed the aspect of affairs. M'Garry vowed eternal gratitude, with protestations that Murphy was the cleverest attorney alive, and ought to be chief justice. The wife was equally vociferous in her acknowledgments, until Murtough, who, when he entered the house, was near falling a sacrifice to the claws of the apothecary's wife, was obliged to rush from the premises to shun the more terrible consequences of her embraces.

CHAPTER VI.

WE have sat so long at our dinner, that we have almost lost sight of poor Andy, to whom we must now return. When he ran to his mother's cabin, to escape from the fangs of Dick Dawson, there was no one within: his mother being digging a few potatoes for supper from the little ridge behind her house, and Oonah Riley, her niece—an orphan girl who lived with her being up to Squire Egan's to sell some eggs; for round the poorest cabins in Ireland you scarcely ever fail to see some ragged hens, whose eggs are never consumed by their proprietors, except, perhaps, on Easter Sunday, but sold to the neighboring gentry at a triffing price.

"Ah, get out o' that, Misther Doyle," said Tim, ac- Andy cared not who was out, or who was in, provided he could only escape from Dick; so without asking any questions, he crawled under the wretched bed in the dark corner, where his mother and Oonah slept, and "I want you to come to bed, sir; -eh, don't be so fool- where the latter, through the blessed influence of ish, Misther Doyle. Sure you don't think the Misthress health, youth, and an innocent heart, had brighter would be rowlin' on the flure there wid you, as dhrunk dreams than attended many a couch whose downy pillows and silken hangings would more than purchase the fee-simple of any cabin in Ireland. There Andy, in a state of utter exhaustion from his fears, his race, and "Arrah, sure you're talkin' there about her this half- his thrashing, soon fell asleep, and the terrors of Dick the Devil gave place to the blessing of the profoundest

Quite unconscious of the presence of her darling Andy was the widow Rooney, as she returned from the potato ridge into her cabin; depositing a skeough of the was left to pass the night in the soft imaginary delights | in its own corner of the cabin. At the same moment Oonah returned, after disposing of her eggs, and How fared it with James Reddy? Alas! poor James | handed the three pence she had received for them to was doomed to a night of torment, the effects of which her aunt, who dropped them into the deep pocket of last dash of water in the skeough, whose open wickerble manner:-

"Take the pail, Oonah, ma chree, and run to the well

"Them's purty pratees, Mrs. Rooney; God save you, ma'am!"

"'Deed an' they are-thank you kindly, Mr. Hogan; God save you and yours too! And how would the woman that owns you be?"

"Hearty, thank you." "Will you step in?"

"No, I'm obleeged to you-I must be aff home wid me; but I'll just get a coal for my pipe, for it wint out on me awile agone with the fright.

"Well, I've heer'd quare things, Larry Hogan," said Oonah, laughing and showing her white teeth; "but I never heer'd so quare a thing as a pipe goin' out with the fright.'

"Ob, how sharp you are!-takin' one up afore they're "Not afore they're down, Larry; for you said it."

"Well, if I was down, you were down on me; so you are down, too, you see. Ha, ha! And afther all now, Oonah, a pipe is like a Christian in many ways: sure its made o'clay like a Christian, and has the spark o' life in it, and while the breath is in it the spark is alive; companion like a Christian?"

"Faix, some Christians isn't pleasant companions at all!" chimed in Mrs. Rooney, sententiously. "Well, but they ought to be," said Larry, "and isn't a pipe sometimes cracked like a Christian, and isn't it sometimes choked like a Christian?"

"Oh, choke you and your pipe, together, Larry! will you never have done?" said the widow.

"The most improvinist thing in the world is smokin'," said Larry, who had now relit his shield of justice protects the peasant as well as the prince. pipe, and squatted himself on a three-legged stool beside the widow's fire. "The most im provinst in the world "-(paugh!)-and a parenthetical whiff of tobacco-smoke curled out of the corner of Larry's mouth-"is smokin': for the smoke shows you, as it were, the life o' man passin' away like a puff' -(paugh!)-just like that; and the tibaky turns to ashes like his poor perishable body; for, as the song says-

"Tibakky is an Indian weed, Alive at morn and dead at eve; It lives but an hour, Is cut down like a flower.

Think o' this when you're smoking tiba-akky!' " And Larry sung the ditty as he crammed some of two weed into the bowl of his pipe with his little finger. "Why, you're as good as a sarmint this evenin', Larry," said the widow, as she lifted the iron pot on the fire.

"There's worse sarmints nor that, I can tell you," rejoined Larry, who took up the old song again-

" 'A pipe it l'arns us all this thing-Tis fair without and foul within, Just like a sowl begrim'd with sin. Think o' this when you're smoking tiba-akky !' ".

Larry puffed away silently for a few minutes, and when Oonah had placed a few sods of turf round the pot in an upright position, that the flame might curl upward round them, and so hasten the boiling, she drew a stool near the fire, and asked Larry to explain about the fright.

"Why, I was coming up by the cross-road there, when what should I see but a ghost-"

"A ghost 111" exclaimed the widow and Oonah, with suppressed voices and distended mouth and eyes. "To all appearance," said Larry; "but it was only a thing was stuck in the hedge to freken whoever was passin' by and as I kem up to it there was a groan, so I started, and looked at it for a minit, or thereaway; but I seen what it was, and threwn a stone at it, for fear I'd be mistaken: and I heer'd titherin' inside the hedge, and then I knew 'twas only devilment of some

"And what was it?" asked Oonah.

"Twas a horse's head' in throth, with an owld hat on the top of it, and two buck-briers stuck out at each side, and some rags banging on them, and an owld breeches shakin' under the head; 'twas just altogether like a long pale-faced man, with high shoulders and no body, and very long arms and short legs:-faith, it frightened me at first.

And no wondher," said Oonah. "Dear, but I think I'd lose my life if I seen the like!'

"But sure," said the widow, "wouldn't you know that ghosts never appears by day?"

"Ay, but I hadn't time to think o' that, bein' taken short wid the fright-more be token, 'twas the place the murdher happened in long ago."

"Sure enough," said the widow. "God betune us and harm !" and she marked herself with the sign of the cross as she spoke; "and a terrible murdher it was," added she.

"How was it?" inquired Conah, drawing her seat closer to her aunt and Larry. "Twas a schoolmaster, dear, that was found dead on the road one mornin' with his head full of fractions," said the widow. "All in jommethry," * said Larry.

"And some said he fell off the horse," said the widow. "And more say the horse fell on him," said Larry. "And again, there was some said the horse kicked him in the head," said the widow.

"And there was talk of shoe-aside," said Larry.

"The horse's shoe was it?" asked Oonah. "No, alanna," said Larry; "shoe-aside is Latin for cutting your throat."

"But he didn't cut his throat," said the widow. "But sure it's all one whether he done it wid a razhir on his throat, or a hammer on his head; it's shoe-aside all the same.' "But there was no hammer found, was there?" said the widow. "No," said Larry, "but some people thought he might have hid the hammer afther he done it, to take off the disgrace of the shoe-aside." "But wasn't there any life in him when he was found?" "Not a taste. The crowner's jury sot on him, and he never said a word ag'in' it, and if he was alive he would."

"And didn't they find anything at all?" said Oonah. "Nothing but the vardict," said Larry.

"And was that what killed him?" said Oonah.

"No, my dear; 'twas the crack in the head that killed him, however he kem by it; but the vardiet o' the crowner was, that it was done, and that some one did it, and that they wor blackguards, whoever they wor, and persons onknown; and sure if they wor onknown then, they'd always stay so, for who'd know them afther doing the like?" "Thrue for you, Larry." said the widow; "but what was that to the murdher over at the green hills beyant?"

"Oh! that was the terriblest murdher ever was in the place, or nigh it; that was the murdher in earn-

With that eagerness which always attends the relation of horrible stories, Larry and the old woman raked up every murder and robbery that had occurred within their recollection, while Oonah listened with mixed curiosity and fear. The boiling over of the pot at length recalled them to a sense of the business that ought to be attended to at the moment, and Larry was invited to take share of the potatoes. This he declined; declaring, as he had done some time previously, that he must "be off home," and to the door he went accordingly; but as the evening had closed into the darkness of the night, he paused on opening it with a sensation he would not have liked to own. The fact was that, after the discussion of numerous nightly murders, he would rather have had daylight on the outside of the cabin; for the horrid stories that had been revived around the blazing hearth were not the best preparation for going a lonely road on a dark night. But go he should, and go he did; and it is not improbable that the widow, from sympathy, had a notion why Larry paused upon the threshold; for the moment he had crossed it, and that they had exchanged their "Good-night, and God-speed you," the door was rapidly closed and bolted The widow returned to the fireside and was silent, while Oonah looked by the light of a candle into the boiling pot, to ascertain if the potatoes were yet done, and cast a fearful glance up the wide chimney as she withdrew from the inspection.

* Anything yery badly broken is said by the Irish Deasantry to be in "jommetary."

"I wish Larry did not tell us such horrid stories," said she, as she laid the rushlight on the table; "I'll be dhramin' all night o' them."

"'Deed an' that's thrue," said the widow; "I wish he hadn't," "Sure you was as bad yourself," said Oonah.

"Troth, an' I b'lieve I was, child, and I'm sorry for it now; but let us ate our supper, and go to bed, in God's Dame."

"I'm afeared o' my life to go to bed!" said Oonah. "Wisha! but I'd give the world it was mornin'."

"Ate your supper, child, ate your supper," said her aunt, giving the example, which was followed by Oonah; and after the light meal their prayers were said, and perchance with a little extra devotion, from their peculiar state of mind; then to bed they went. The rushlight being extinguished, the only light remaining was that shed from the red embers of the decaying fire, which cast so uncertain a glimmer within the cabin that its effect was almost worse than utter darkness to a timid person; for any object within its range assumed a form unlike its own, and presented some fantastic image to the eye; and as Oonab, contrary to her usual habit, could not fall asleep the moment she went to bed, she could not resist peering forth from under the bed-clothes through the uncertain gloom, in a painful threw her petticoat over her shoulders. state of watchfulness, which became gradually relaxed | "What's this at all?" said the widow, rising and mind was of so tenacious a character, that an impresinto an uneasy sleep.

The night was about half spent when Andy began to awake; and as he stretched his arms, and rolled his whole body round, he struck the bottom of the bed above him in the action and woke his mother. "Dear me," thought the widow, "I can't sleep at all to-night." Andy gave another turn soon after, which roused Oonah. She started, and shaking her aunt, asked her, in a low voice, if it was she who kicked her, though she scarcely hoped an answer in the affirmative, and yet dared not believe what her fears whispered.

"No, a cushla," whispered the aunt.

"Did you feel anything?" asked Oonah, trembling violently.

"What do you mane, alanna?" said the aunt. Andy gave another roll. "There it is again!" gasped Oonah; and in a whisper, scarcely above her breath, she added, "Aunt-there's some one under the bed!"

The aunt did not answer; but the two women drew closer together and held each other in their arms, as if their proximity afforded protection. Thus they lay in breathless fear for some minutes, while Andy began to be influenced by a vision, in which the duel, and the chase, and the thrashing were all enacted over again, and soon an odd word began to escape from the dream. "Gi' me the pist'l, Dick—the pist'l!"

"There are two of them!" whispered Oonah. "God be merciful to ust Do you hear him asking for the pistol?"

"Screech!" said her aunt. "I can't," said Oonah.

Andy was quiet for some time, while the women scarcely breathed. "Suppose we get up, and make for the door?" said the aunt.

"I wouldn' put my foot out of the bed for the world," "I'm afeared one o' them will catch me by the leg."

'Howld him! howld him!" grumbled Andy. "I'll die with the fright, aunt! I feel I'm dyin'! Let us say our prayers, aunt, for we're goin to be murdhered!" The two women began to repeat with fervor their aves and paternosters, while at this immediate juncture, Andy's dream having borne him to the dirty ditch where Dick Dawson had pommeled him, he began to vociferate, "Murder, murder!" so fiercely that the they began to thank God that their lives were safe. women screamed together in an agony of terror, and "Murder, murder!" was shouted by the whole party; for, once the widow and Oonah found their voices, they made good use of them. The noise awoke Andy, who had, be it remembered, a tolerably long sleep by this time: and he having quite forgotten where he had lain down, and finding himself confined by the bed above him, and smothering for want of air, with the fierce shouts of murder ringing in his ear, woke in as great a fright as the women in the bed, and became a party in the terror he himself had produced; every plunge he gave under the bed inflicted a poke or a kick on his mother and cousin, which was answered by of us." the cry of "Murder!"

"Let me out-let me out, Misther Dick!" roared Andy. "Where am I at all? Let me out!"

"Help! help! murdher!" roared the women.

"I'll never shoot any one again, Misther Dick-let me up!" Andy scrambled from under the bed, half awake, and wholly frightened by the darkness and the noise, which was now increased by the barking of the cur-dog. "Hie at him, Coaly!" roared Mrs. Rooney; "howld him! howld him!" Now as this address was often made to the cur respecting the pig, when Mrs. Rooney sometimes wanted a quiet moment in the day, and the pig didn't like quitting the premises, the dog ran to the corner of the cabin where the pig habitually lodged, and laid hold of his ear with the strongest testimonials of affection, which polite attention the pig acknowledged by a prolonged squealing, that drowned the voices of the women and Andy together; and now the cocks and hens that were roosting on the rafters of the cabin were startled by the din, and the crowing and cackling and the flapping of the frightened fowls, as they flew about in the dark, added to the general uproar and confusion.

"A-h!" screamed Oonah, "take your hands off me!" as Andy, getting from under the bed, laid his hand upon it to assist him, and caught a grip of his cousin.

"Who are you at all?" cried Andy, making another claw, and catching hold of his mother's nose. "Oonah, they're murdhering me!" shouted the Widow. called his senses to Andy, who shouted, "Mother, ning on the part of persons least interested in the mother! what's the matter?" A frightened hen flew in his face, and nearly knocked Andy down. "Bad cess to you," cried Andy, "what did you hit me for?"

"Tho are you at all?" cried the widow.

'won't you know me?" said Andy.

"No, I don't know you; by the vartue o' my oath, I don't; and I'll never swear again' you, jintlemen, if you l'ave the place and spare our lives!'

Here the hens flew against the dresser, and smash went the plates and dishes. "Oh, jintlemen dear, don't rack and ruin me that way; don't destroy a lone woman." "Mother, mother, what's this at all? Don't you know your own Andy?" "Is it you that's there?" cried the widow, catching hold of him. "To be sure it's me," said Andy

"Are you sure?" said his mother.

"You won't let us be murdhered, will you?" "Who'd murdher you?"

"Them people that's with you." Smash went another plate. "Do you hear that-they're rackin' my place, the villains!"

"Divil a one's wid me at all!" said Andy. "I'll take my oath there was three or four under the bed," said Oonah. "No one but myself," said Andy.

"Cock sure," said Andy, and a loud crowing gave evidence in favor of his assertion.

"The fowls is going mad," said the widow.
"And the pig's distracted," said Oonah. "No wonder! the dog's murdherin' him," said Andy. "Get up and light the rushlight, Oonah," said the widow: "you'll get a spark out o' the turf cendhers."

"Some o' them will catch me, maybe," said Oonah. "Get up, I tell you!" said the widow. Oonah now arose, and groped her way to the fireplace, where, by dint of blowing upon the embers and poking the rushlight among the turf ashes, a light was at length obtained. She then returned to the bed, and

"Bad cess to the know I know D' said Andy. "Look under the bed, Oonah," said the aunt. Oonah obeyed, and screamed, and ran behind Andy "There's another here yet!" said she.

Andy seized the poker, and, standing on the defensive, desired the villain to come out. The demand was not complied with.

"There's nobody there," said Andy. "I'll take my oath there is," said Oonah; "a dirty blackguard without any clothes on him." "Come out, you robber!" said Andy, making a lunge under the truckle.

wrapping a blanket round her.

A grunt ensued, and out rushed the pig, who had escaped from the dog, the dog having discovered a greater attraction in some fat that was knocked from the dresser, which the widow intended for the dipping of rushes in, but the dog being enlightened to his own interest without rushlights, and preferring mutton fat to pig's ear, had suffered the grunter to go at large, while he was captivated by the fat. The clink of a threelegged stool the widow seized to the rescue was a stronger argument against the dog than he was prepared to answer, and a remnant of fat was preserved from the rapacious Coaly.

"Where's the rest o' the robbers?" said Oonah. "There's three o' them, I know."

"You're dhramin'," said Andy. "Divil a robber is here but myself."

"And what brought you here?" said his mother. "I was afeared they'd murdher me!" said Andy. "Murdher!" exclaimed the widow and Oonah together, still startled by the very sound of the word. Who do you mane?"

"Misther Dick," said Andy. "Aunt, I tell you," said Oonah, "this is some more of Andy's blunders. Sure Misther Dawson wouldn't be goin' to murdher any one; let us look round the cabin and find out who's in it, for I won't be aisy ontil I look into every corner, to see there's no robbers in the place, for I tell you again, there was three o' them undher the

The search was made, and the widow and Oonah were at length satisfied that there were no midnight assassins there with long knives to cut their throats, and then

"But, oh! look at my chaynee," said the widow, clasping her hands, and casting a look of despair at the shaftered delf that lay around her; "look at my chaynee!" "And what was it brought you here?" said Oonah, facing round on Andy, with a dangerous look, rather, in her bright eye. "Will you tell us that-what was it?" "I came to save my life, I tell you," said Andy. "To put us in dhread of ours, you mane," said Oonah. "Just look at the omadhaun there," said she to her aunt, "standin' with his mouth open, just as if nothin' happened, and he after frightening the lives out "True for you, alanna," said her aunt. "And would no place sarve you, indeed, but undher our bed, you vagabone?" said his mother, roused to a sense of his delinquency; "to come in like a merodin' villain, as you are, and hide under the bed and frighten the lives out of us, and rack and ruin my place!" "Twas Misther Dick, I tell you," said Andy. "Bad scran to you, you unlucky hangin' bone thief!" cried the widow, seizing him by the hair, and giving him a hearty cuff on the ear, which would have knocked him down, only that Oonah kept him up by an equally well-applied box on the other. "Would you murdher me?" shouted Andy, as he saw his mother lay hold of the broom. "Aren't you afther frightenin' the lives out of us.

you dirty, good-for-nothing, mischief-making-" On poured the torrent of abuse, rendered more impressive by a whack at every word. Andy roared, and the more he roared the more did Oonah and his mother

CHAPTER VII.

thrash him.

"Love rules the camp, the court, the grove, And men below and saints above. For Love is Heaven, and Heaven is Love-"

So sung Scott. Quite agreeing with the antithesis of the last line, perhaps in the second, where he talks of men and saints, another view of the sub or turn of the phrase, might have introduced sinners quite as successfully. This is said without the smallest intention of using the word sinners in a questionable The name of Oonah, and the voice of his mother, re- manner Love, in its purest shape, may lead to sinfor a duet, and so spoiis it?

"Never did run smooth." And so it was in the case of Fanny Dawson and Eday, and even cousins-sometimes put in their oar to disturb that stream which is troubled enough without their interference, and, as the Bard of Avon says, ward O'Connor. A piece of innocent fun on the part of her brother, and blind pertinacity-indeed, downright absurdity—on her father's side, interrupted the intercourse of affection, which had subsisted silently for many a long day between the lovers, but was acknowledged at last, with delight to the two whom it most concerned, and satisfaction to all who knew or held them dear Yet the harmony of this sweet concordance of spirits was marred by youthful frolic and doting absurdity. This welding together of hearts in the purest fire of nature's own contriving was broken at a blow by a weak old man. It is too much to call this a sin! Less mischievous things are branded with the name in the commonplace parlance of the world. The cold and phlegmatic may not understand this; but they who can love know how bitterly every after-hour of life may be poisoned with the taint which hapless love has infused into the current of future years, and can believe how many a heart equal to the highest ente prise has been palsied by the touch of despair. Sweet and holy is the duty of child to parent; but sacred also is the obligation of those who govern in so hal lowed a position. Their rule should be guided by jus tice; they should pray for judgment in their mastery Fanny Dawson's father was an odd sort of person. His ancestors were settlers in Ireland of the time of William the Third, and having won their lands by the sword, it is quite natural the love of arms should have been hereditary in the family Mr. Dawson, therefore, had served many years as a soldier, and was a bit of a martinet, not only in military but all other affairs. His sion once received there became indelible; and if the Major once made up his mind, or indulged the belief, that such and such things were so and so, the waters of truth could never wash out the mistake-stubborn ness had written them there with her own indelible marking-ink.

Now, one of the old gentleman's weak points was a museum of the most heterogeneous nature, consisting of odds and ends from all parts of the world, and appertaining to all subjects. Nothing was too high or too low; a bronze helmet from the plains of Marathon, which, to the classic eye of an artist, conveyed the idea of a Minerva's head beneath it, would not have been more prized by the Major than a cavalry cap with some bullet-mark of which he could tell an anecdote. A certain skin of a tiger he prized much, because the animal had dined on his dearest friend in one of the jungles of Bengal; also a pistol which he vouched for as being the one with which Hatfield fired at George the Third; the hammer with which Crawley (of Hessian-boot memory) murdered his family; the string which was on Viotti's violit when he played before Queen Charlotte; the horn which was supposed to be in the lantern of Guy Fawkes; a small piece of the coat worn by the Prince of Orange on his landing in England; and other such relics. But far above these, the Major prized the skeleton of a horse's head, which occupied the principal place in his museum. This he declared to be part of the identical horse which bore Duke Schomberg when he crossed the Boyne, in the celebrated battle so called; and with whimsical ingenuity, he had contrived to string some wires upon the bony fabric, which yielded a sort of hurdy-gurdy vibration to the strings when touched; and the Major's most favorite feat was to play the tune of the Boyne Water on the head of Duke Schomberg's horse. In short, his collection was composed of trifles from north, south, east and west; some leaf from the prodigal verdure of India, or gorgeous shell from the Pacific, or paw of bear, or tooth of walrus; but beyond all teeth, one pre-eminently was valued-it was one of his own, which he had jost the use of by a wound in the jaw, received in action; and no one ever entered his house and escaped without hearing all about it, from the first shot fired in the affair by the skirmishers, to the last charge of the victorious cavalry. The tooth was always produced along with the story, together with the declaration, that every dentist who ever saw it protested it was the largest human tooth ever seen Now some little sparring was not unfrequent between old Mr. Dawson and Edward, on the subject of their respective museums; the old gentleman "pooh-poohing" Edward's "rotten, rusty rubbish," as he called it, and Edward defending, as gently as he could, his patriotic partiality for natural antiquities. This little war never led to any evil results; for Edward not only loved Fanny too well, but respected age too much to lean hard on the old gentleman's weakness, or seek to reduce his fancied superiority as a collector; but the tooth, the ill-omened tooth, at last gnawed asunder the bond of friendship and affection which had subsisted between the two families for so many years

The Major had paraded his tooth so often, that Dick Dawson began to tire of it, and for the purpose of mak ing it a source of amusement to himself, he stole his father's keys, one day, and opening the cabinet in which his tooth was enshrined, he abstracted the grinder which nature had bestowed on the Major, and substituted in its stead a horse's tooth of no contempt ible dimensions. A party some days after dined with the old gentleman, and after dinner the story of the skirmish turned up, as a matter of course, and the enormous size of the tooth wound up the tedious tale. "Hadn't you better show it to them, sir?" said Dick, from the foot of the table.

"Indeed, then, I will," said the Major, "for it really is a curiosity."

"Let me go for it, sir," said Dick, well knowing he would be refused.

"No, no," answered his father, rising; "I never let any one go to my pet cabinet but myself;" and so saying he left the room, and proceeded to his museum. It has been already said, that the Major's mind was of that character, which once being satisfied of anything could never be convinced of the contrary; and havin; for years been in the habit of drawing his own tooth out of his own cabinet, the increased size of the one which he now extracted from it never struck him; so he returned to the dining-room, and presented with great exultation to the company the tooth Dick had substituted. It may be imagined how the people stared, when an old gentleman, and moreover a major, declared upon his honor, that a great horse's tooth was question; for is it not a sin when the folly, or caprice, his own; but having done so, politeness forbade they or selfishness of a third party or fourth makes a trio or should contradict him, more particularly at the head quartette of that which nature undoubtedly intended of his own table, so they smothered their smiles as well as they could, and declared it was the most wonderful Fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, uncles, aunts- tooth they ever beheld and instead of attempting to tave roused the envy of a Red Indian.

"I think that's something like a tooth!" said Dick. "Prodigious-wonderful-tremendous!" ran round Irish story, and may therfore be gently irregular.

he board.

" (live it to me again," said one. "Let me look at it once more," said another.

"Colossal!" exclaimed a third.

unit of the table.

Jajor's whole character. A received opinion was with workmen would be to see a lady get out of it!" could change it: it was his tooth. A belief or a doubt it," said a gentleman present. was equally sacred with him; and though his senses in dear tooth.

dote and its attendant relic made him for ler of show- riding toward the church. Their attention was ating it off; and many a day did Dick the Devil enjoy the tracted by so strange a sight; and, spurring onward, astonishment of visitors as his father exhibited the Egan exclaimed, "By the powers! 'tis Letty Dawson! their father," day Edward O'Connor happened to be in the museum sure enough she was the woman, in another month. with a party of ladies, to whom the old gentleman was showing off his treasures with great effect and some she had plenty of fun in her, notwithstanding; her think yourself?" pains; for the Major, like most old soldiers, was very attentive to the fair sex. At last the pet cabinet was opened, and out came the tooth. One universal ex-:lamation of surprise arose on its appearance: "What t wonderful man the Major was to have such a tooth!" fust then, by an unlucky chance, Edward, who had not might claim and win her. seen the Major produce the wonder from his cabinet, ped from the horse's head, he said:

berg's skull."

nean by old Schomberg?"

he musical relic.

lended at what he considered Edward's evasion.

dence of a desire to be reconciled in his voice and nanner-"I assure you, sir, it was of this tooth I spoke;" and he held up the tooth the Major had produced as his -WII.

"I know it was, sir," said the Major, "and therefore

I didn't relish your allusions to my tooth." " Your tooth, sir?" exclaimed Edward, in surprise.

"Yes, sir, mine."

"My dear sir," said Edward, "there is some mistake here; this is a horse's tooth."

"Give it to me, sir!" said the Major, snatching it from Edward. "You may think this very witty, Mr. D'Connor, but I don't; if my tooth is of superhuman dze, I'm not to be called a horse for it, sir; -nor Schomberg, sir!-horse-ahem! better than an ass, however."

While this brief but angry outbreak took place, the bystanders, of course, felt excessively uncomfortable; and poor Edward knew not what to do. The Major he knew to be of too violent a temper to attempt explanttion for the present; so bowing to the lulies, he left the room, with that flushed look of silent vexation to which courteous youth is sometimes obliged to submit at the hands of intemperate age.

Neither Fanny nor Dick was at home when this ocurred, so Edward quitted the house, and was forbidlen to enter it afterward. The Major suddenly entertained a violent dislike to Edward O'Connor, and hated | even to hear his name mentioned. It was in vain that explanation was attempted; his self-love had received a violent shock, of which Edward had been the innocent means. In vain did Dick endeavor to make him- last couplet; and closing the book and replacing it in r val did Dick endeavor to make him- last couplet; and closing the book and replacing it in r val did Dick endeavor to make himquence; in vain was it manifest that Fanny was grieved: | wish he were not so sad!" the old Major persisted in declaring that Edward O'Connor was a self-sufficient jackanapes, and forbade most peremptorily that further intercourse should take place between him and his daughter; and she had too as peculing saranger; and the lower a husband was to be won, privilege of all high a sense of duty, and he of honor, to seek to violate hor and laner to had very little resemblance to the command. But though they never met, they loved the ter, but placed the breast of the tree in the ter, but they have the tree to be tree t rolic of his should have interrupted the happiness of the widow and found the order of the character of the should have interrupted the happiness of the widow and found the order of the character of the charact of communion between them by talking to Edward verscooks la tory could never act on, if we will be the later of the contract o about Fanny, and to Fanny about Edward, whose last all our en a see up in the more of the chest which held all their clothes in common, and Biddy .ong was sure, through the good offices of the brother, the me let of the rest; your planted mande, and the first in the left but her to find its way into the sister's album, already stored and mountain sare all very well on their carract, but or part to be a fine to the teners. with many a tribute from her lover's muse.

Fanny was a sweet creature—one of those choice and siquant bits of Nature's creation which she sometimes M. dr. who was in the in very condition of the conditi for however one may endeavor to make words play the part of color, lineament, voice, and expression-and lowever successfully-still a verbal description can lever convey a true notion of personal charms; and personal charms Fanny had, decidedly; not that she vas strictly beautiful, but, at times, nevertheless, ecliping beauty far more regular, and throwing symmetry it fascinated could not define.

and if at times it chafed and was troubled from the of these was a certain Mat Riley, who, on small means, course in which it ran, the temporary turbulence only managed to live, and rear a son and three bouncing. Lade its limpid depth and quietness more beautiful. good-looking girls, who helped to make butter, feed the three; and there is no knowing low far old Flana-Her heart was the very temple of generosity, the throne calves, and superintend the education of pizs; and on of honor, and the seat of tenderness. The gentlest these active and comely lasses Mr. Flanagan often cast sympathies dwelt in her soul, and answered to the an eye of admiration, with a view to making one of : lightest call of another's grief; while mirth was danc- them his vife; for, though he might have had his pick ; ig in her eye, a word that implied the sorrow of an- and choice of many fine girls in the towns he dealt in, reature in the world! The old Major, usud to roving habits from his pro- his happiness and profit.-for in that principally lay the "PATTERN."

goved, sipping his claret with a screnity which might | deed it was her high mettle that won her the squire's | the subject thus: heart. The story is not long, and may as well be told here—though a little out of place, perhaps; but it's an

The squire had admired Letitia Dawson, as most of the young men of her acquaintance did-appreciated her round waist and well-turned ankle, her spirited eyes and cheerful laugh; and danced with her at every ball as "Gigantic!" shouted ail, as the tooth made the cir- | much as any other fine girl in the country: but never seriously thought of her as a wife, until one day a party The Major was delighted, and never remembered his | visited the parish church, whose old tower was often ooth to have created such a sensation; and when at ascended for the fine view it commanded. At this time ast it was returned to him, he turned it about in his the tower was under repair, and the masons were own hand, and cast many fond glances at the mon- drawing up materials in a basket, which, worked by is seven; and three tempinnies is two-and-sixpence; trosity, before it was finally deposited in his waistcoat rope and pulley, swung on a beam protruding from that's twenty-seven poun' two-and sixpence; eightpocket. This was the most ridiculous part of the ex- the top of the tower. The basket had just been lowered pence-ha pen libition: to see a gentleman, with the use of his eyes, for a fresh load of stones, when Letitia exclaimed, company, Mat. ooking affectionately at a thumping horse's tooth, and "Wouldn't it be fine fun to get into the basket, and be believing it to be his own. Yet this was a key to the hauled up to the tower?-how astonished the o' my colleens you've been throwing the eye at, sir?"

aim unchangeable, no alteration of circumstances "I would be more astonished to see a lady get into firkins!"

"Then here goes to astonish you," said Letitia, laying horse's tooth-no, it was a piece of himself-his own did her friends and the workmen below endeavor to ture prime." dissuade her; up she would go, and up she did go; and After this party, the success which crowned his anec- it was during her ascent that Egan and a friend were ket not lively.' enormous tooth as his own. Fonder and fonder grew Well done, Lettyl you're the right girl for my money! he Major of his tooth and his story, until the unlucky By Jovel if I ever marry, Letty's the woman." And

> Now, Fanny would not have done the basket feat, but spirits were light; and though, for some time, she felt deeply the separation from Edward, she rallied after a while, felt that unavailing sorrow but impaired the health of the mind, and, supported by her good sense, she waited in hopefulness for the time that Edward perceived the relic in the hand of one of the ladies at ticipated election. The ladies were making up bows of honest industherin' man than one o' your showy lanthe extremity of the group, and, fancying it had drop- ribbon for their partizans, and Fanny had been so em- therumswash divils out of a town, that would spend ployed all the morning alone in the drawing-room; her | more than she'd bring with her." "I suppose that is one of the teeth out of old Schom- pretty fingers pinching, and pressing, and stitching the silken favors, while now and then her hand wandered think." The Major thought this an impertinent allusion to his to a wicker-basket which lay beside her, to draw forth a political bias, and said, very sharply, "What do you seissors or a needlecase. As she worked, a shade of thought crossed her sweet face, like a passing cloud "The horse's head, sir," replied Edward, pointing to across the sun; the pretty fingers stopped—the work was laid down-and a small album gently drawn from there's a fine bull goose that Nance towld me she'd "It was of my tooth you spoke, sir, when you said | the neighboring basket. She opened the book and read; have ready afther last mass; for Father Ulick said he'd 'old Schomberg,' " returned the Major, still more of- they were lines of Edward O'Connor's, which she drank into her heart; they were the last he had written, which "I assure you," said Edward, with the strongest evi- her brother had heard him sing and had brought her.

THE SNOW.

An old man sadly said, "Where's the snow That fell the year that's fled?-Where's the snow?" As fruitless were the task Of many a joy to ask, As the snow!

The hope of airy birth, Like the snow, Is stain'd on reaching earth, Like the snow; While 'tis sparkling in the ray, Tis melting fast away, Like the snow!

A cold, deceitful thing Is the snow, Though it come on dove-like wing-The false snow! 'Tis but rain disguised appears; And our hopes are frozen tears, Like the snow!

CHAPTER VIII.

quickly. Mr. Flanagan was en a cel na supplying one real too and a cel na supplying one real too.

question the fact, they launched forth in expressions fession, would often go on a ramble somewhere for aforesaid happiness of Mr. Flanagan. Now, this intenif admiration and surprise, and the fable, instead of weeks together, at which times Fanny went to Merry- tion of honoring one of the three Miss Rileys with probeing questioned, was received with welcome, and vale to her sister, Mistress Eagan, who was also a fine- | motion he never hinted at in the remotest degree, and nade food for mirth. The difficulty was not to laugh; hearted creature, but less soft and sentimental than even in his own mind the thought was mixed up with and in the midst of twisted mouths, affected sneezing. Fanny. She was of the dashing school rather, and be- fat cattle and prices current; and it was not until a lei and applications of pocket-handkerchiefs to rebellious fore she became the mother of so large a family, sure moment one day, when he was paying Mat Riley achimations, Dick, the maker of the joke, sat un- thought very little of riding over a gate or a fence. In- for some of his farming produce, that he broached

" Mat." "Sir."

"I'm thinking o' marrying."

"Well, she'll have a snug house, whoever she is, Misther Flanagan."

"Them's fine girls o' yours,"

Poor Mat opened his eyes with delight at the prospect of such a match for one of his daughters, and said they were "comely lumps o' girls, sure enough; but, what was betther, they wor good,"

"That's what I'm thinking," says Flanagan, "There's two ten-poun' notes, and a five, and one is six, and one

"Oh, no matther, Misther Flanagan. And is it one "Yes, Mat, it is. You're askin' too much for them

"Oh, Misther Flanagan, consider it's prime butther. I'll back my girls for making up a bit o' butther agen he present case should have shown him it was a hold of the rope and jumping into the basket. In vain any girls in Ireland; and my cows is good, and the pas-

"Tis a farthing a poun' too high, Mat; and the mar-

"The butther is good, Mr. Flanagan; and not decenther girls in Ireland than the same girls, though I'm "I'm thinking I'll marry one o' them, blat."

"Sure, an' it's proud I'll be, sir; and which o' them is it, maybe?" "Faith, I don't know myself, Mat. Which do you

"Throth, myself doesn't know-they're all good. Nance is nice, and Biddy's biddable, and Kitty's 'cute." "You're a snug man, Mat; you ought to be able to give a husband a trifle with them.' "Nothing worth your while, anyhow, Misther Flanggan. But sure one o' my girls without a rag to her At Merryvale now all was expectation about the an- back, or a tack to her feet, would be betther help to an

"That's thrue, Mat. I'll marry one o' your girls, I

"You'll have my blessin', sir; and proud I'll be-and proud the girl ought to be-that I'll say. And suppose, now, you'd come over on Sunday, and take share of a plain man's dinner, and take your pick o' the girlscome and dine with us."

"I can't, Mat; I must be in the canal boat on Sunday; but I'll go and breakfast with you to-morrow, on my way to Bill Mooney's, who has a fine lot of pigs to sell-remarkable fine pigs."

"Well, we'll expect you to breakfast, sir." "Mat, there must be no nonsense about the wedding."

"As you plase, sir." "Just marry her off, and take her home, Short reckonings make long friends,"

"Thrue for you, sir."

"Nothing to give with the girl, you say?" "My blessin' only, sir."

"Well, you must throw in that butther, Mat, and take the farthin' off," "It's yours, sir," said Mat, delighted, loading Flanagan with "Good-byes," and "God save yous," until they should meet next morning at breakfast, Wit rode home in great glee at the prospect of providing so well for one of his girls, and told them a man would be there the next morning to make choice of one of them for his wife. The girls, very naturally, inquired who the man was; to which Mat, in the plenitude or proceed the season of the two to hard following the first of the contraction of the contr of larger contract of the cont title the late to the life of the life of the late of would be experiently the beautiful. 1.11. in a contract the contract of the I also Area as a second for hand as for the first for A tear did course down Fanny's cheek as she read the the appear and the transfer of the transf and I do not the company of the and ket-day was enough to establish the possession, by Love roof as many patterns, cuts, of pass, and orders whichever of the girls went to the public place; but tot the less fondly and truly; and Dick, grieved that a werow Laurence, and made from Darre L. Yet | Y sister he loved and a friend he valued, kept up a sort over as well as the more elevated part of the contract You are really must know something of the frie free free the factor of the frie treatment to the first treatment treatment to the first treatment to the first treatment treatment treatment to the first treatment treatme couchsafes to treat the world with, just to show what core on the historia, who will have been been a first the world with, just to show what core on the historia, who will have been been a first the world with, just to show what core on the historia with the world with, just to show what core on the historia with the world with, just to show what core on the historia with the world with the w the can do. Her person I shall not attempt to describe; the Leverto day, to the last metaphor and classic illustration, and go back to Mat ita don of the pleas are loving widow, who can had Riley's cabin-the girls were washing, and starching, hen in an old sort of a herry, and sot reloi him. . . and return to and the morning saw them are siderable in Ireland; and his dealings in beef and but- which Nation were part of the siderable in Ireland; and his dealings in beef and butter were extensive. This brought him into contact to be at own also and the with the farmers for many miles round, whom he met, the first in the farmers for many miles round, whom he met, ato the shade, by some charm which even they whom not only every market-day at every market-town in the state of the shade, by some charm which even they whom not only every market-day at every market-town in the county, but at their own houses, where a knife and kind in the county at their own houses, where a knife and kind in the county is the county at their own houses, where a knife and kind is the county in the county at their own houses, where a knife and kind is the county in the county in the county is the county at their own houses, where a knife and kind is the county in the county in the county is the county in the county in the county in the county is the county in the county in the county in the county is the county in t Her mind was as clear and pure as a mountain stream; fork were always at the service of the rich buyer. One and a vivin in the service of the rich buyer. " the state of the possibly the best looking, and certainly the youngest of > the spoke very little to any of the girls; but, when he was leaving the house, he said to the father, as he was

* A half-holy, half-merry meeting, held at some cer ther would bring a tear there. She was the sweetest he thought the simple, thrifty, and industrious habits tain place, on the day dedicated to the saint who is sup of a plain farmer's daughter more likely to conduce to posed to be the PATRON of the spot - hence the name shaking hands with him, "Mat, I'll do it;" and, pointing to Kitty, he added, "That's the one I'll have."

Great was the rage of the elder sisters, for Flanagan was notoriously a wealthy man; and when he quitted the house, Kitty set up such a shout of laughter, that cuce. her father and sisters told her several times "not to make a fool of herself." Still she laughed, and throughout the day sometimes broke out into sudden roars; and while her sides shook with merriment, she would throw herself into a chair, or lean against the wall, to rest herself after the fatigue of her uproarious mirth. Now Kitty, while she laughed at the discomfiture of her greedy sisters, also laughed at the mistake into which Flanagan had fallen; for, as her father said of her, she was "cute," and she more than suspected the cause of Elanagan's choice, and enjoyed the anticipation of his disappointment, for she was fonder of dress than either Nancy or Biddy, and reveled in the notion of astonishing "the old mggard," as she called him; and this she did "many a time and oft." In vain did Flanagan try to keep her extravagance within bounds. She would either wheedle, reason, bully, or shame him into doing what she said "was right and proper for a dened up to the eyes, while the widow squeezed herself snug man like him." His house was soon well fur- closer into the corner. nished: she made him get her a jaunting car. She sometimes would go to parties, and no one was better and her desire to be off, still would talk to her, for the dressed than the woman he chose for her rags. He got love of mischief. enraged now and then, but Kitty pacified him by soft words and daring inventions of her fertile fancy. Once, when he caught her in the fact of wearing a costly crimson silk gown, and stormed, she soothed him by telling him it was her old black one she had dyed; and this bouncer, to the great amusement of her female friends, he loved to repeat, as a proof of what a careful contriving creature he had in Kitty. She was naturally quick-witted. She endeavor to smother her laughter. managed him admirably, deceived him into being more comfortable than ever he had been before, and had the Tom. laudable ambition of endeavoring to improve both his and her own condition in every way. She set about educating herself, too, as far as her notions of education went; and, in a few years after her marriage, by judiciously using the means which her husband's wealth afforded her of advancing her position in society, no one could have recognized in the lively and well-dressed Mrs. Flanagan the gawky daughter of a middling farmer. She was very good-natured, too, toward her sisters, whose condition she took care to improve with her own; and a very fair match for the eldest was made tains with relentless hand, and, spite of Biddy's screams, through her means. The younger one was often stay- rudely unvailing the sanctuary of sorrowing widowing in her house, dividing her time nearly between the hood. Oh, what a sight for the rising—I beg their partown and her father's farm, and no party which Mrs. don, the sinking-generation of old gentlemen who Flanagan gave or appeared at went off without giving take young wives did Tom behold! There was the ribs. Biddy a chance to "settle herself in the world." This widow lying back in the corner-she who was reprewas not done without a battle new and then with old sented as inconsolable and crying all day-shaking with Flanagan, whose stinginess would exhibit itself upon laughter, the tears, not of sorrow, but irrepressible occasion; but at last all let and hindrance to the merry mirth, rolling down a cheek rosy enough for a bride. lady ceased, by the sudden death of her old husband, Biddy, of course, joined the shout. Tom roared in who left her the entire of his property, so that, for the an agony of delight. The very driver's risibility refirst time, his will was her pleasure.

widow" was withdrawn from her own house by her authorship of the joke, put in a longer and louder brother and sister to the farm, which grew to be a "Bua-a-a-a-a" much more comfortable place than when Kitty left; for Tom, with all his devilment, had good taste enough to to have remained in her own house after the loss of feel it was not a scene to linger on; so merely giving a "her good man" would have been too hard on "the merry nod to each of the ladies, he turned about his lone woman," So said her sister and her brother, horse as fast as he could, and rode away in roars of though, to judge from the widow's eyes, she was not laughter. very heart-broken; she cried as much, no doubt, as could Kitty be expected to do more?

Biddy asked her to drive into town, where Biddy had to do a little shopping—that great business of ladies' lives.

"Oh, Biddy, dear, I must not go out so soon."

"Twill do you good, Kitry."

"I mustn't be seen, you know-'twouldn't be right; and poor dear Fianagan not buried a week!" "Sure, who'll see you? We'll go in the covered car, and draw the curtains close, and who'll be the wiser?" "If I thought no one would see me!" said the widow.

along—the drive will do you good."

horse not at work he was going to yoke in a cart that her back to good humor, was to steal behind her chair, would have a horse, and her brother swore the lamb pat her gently on her peachy cheek, and cry "Bua!" should be served first, till Biddy made a compromise, and agreed to take the lamb under the seat of the car, and so please all parties the lamb tied need and heels and crammed under the blunders of her son-and indeed mothers are well off seat, and the curcains of the car ready to be drawn at who have not more than blunders to forgive. Andy did a moment's notice, in case they should meet any one all in his power to make himself useful at home, now on the road; for "why should not the poor widow enjoy that he was out of place and dependent on his mother, the fresh air as they drove along?" About half-way to and got a day's work here and there where he could. the town, nowever, the widow suddenly exclaimed:

"Biddy, draw the curtains!"

"What's the matter?" says Biddy. road!" and the widow looked so herritled, and plucked "scrap o' meadow," as he called it, on a small field of at the curtains so furiously, that Biddy, who was su- his mother's. Indeed, it was but a "scrap;" for the perstitious, thought nothing but Flanagan's ghost place where it grew was one of those broken bits of me." could have produced such an effect; and began to ground so common in the vicinity of mountain ranges, scream and fitter holy ejaculations, until the sight of where rocks, protruding through the soil, give the notion Tom Durfy riding after them showed her the cause of of a very fine crop of stones. Now, this locality gave her sister's alarm. "If that divil, Tom Durfy, sees me, he'll tell it all over the country, he's such a quiz; shove yourself well before the door there, Biddy, that he can't peep into foundation of his haystack, and the superstructure conthe car. Oh, why did I come out this day!-I wish your tongue was cut out, Biddy, that asked me!"

widow's desire, had shoved herself well before the work completed, wondered and rejoiced at the size of he sauntered down the street from Owny Doyle's door, meaning; "turn about, and pretend to drive back, was as great a cheat as a bottle of champagne-more We'll let that fellow ride on," said she, quietly, to than half bottom. It was all very well for the widow Biddy.

Durfy.

widow shrunk back into the corner of the car.

"How very sudden poor Mr. Flanagan's death was!- the darret good-by." "I value, very blich shocke I to hear of it," said Tom. "Twas dreadful!" said Biddy.

"How is poor Mrs, Flanagan?" said Tom. "As well as can be expected, poor thing! Good-by!" said Biddy, manifestly anxious to cut short the confer-

This anxiety was so obvious to Tom, who, for the sake of fun, loved cross-purposes dearly, that he determined to push his conversation further, just because he saw it was unwelcome,

"To be sure," continued he, "at his time of life—"
"Very truly," said Biddy. "Good-morning."

"And the season has been very unhealthy." "Doctor Growling told me so yesterday," said Biddy; "I wonder you're not afraid of stopping in this east wind-colds are very prevalent. Good-by!" ticularly over all Irish affairs, put it into the lamb's head to bleat. The sound at first did not strike Tom Durfy as singular, they being near a high hedge, within which it was likely enough a lamb might bleat; but Biddy, shocked at the thought of being discovered, in the fact of making her jaunting-car a market-cart, red-

Tom, seeing the increasing embarrassment of Biddy,

"I beg your pardon," he continued, "just one moment more—I wanted to ask was it not apop exy, for I heard an odd report about the death?"

"Oh, yes," says Biddy; "apoplexy-good-by!"

"Did he speak at all?" asked Tom. "Baa!" says the lamb.

Tom cocked his ears, Biddy grew redder, and the widow crammed her handkerchief into her mouth to

"I hope poor Mrs. Flanagan bears it well?" says

"Poor thing!" says Biddy, "she's inconsolable."

" Baa-a /" says the lamb. Biddy spoke louder and faster, the widow kicked with laughing, and Tom suspected whence the sound pro-

"She does nothing but cry all day!" says Biddy. "Baa-a-a !" says the lamb.

The widow could stand it no longer, and a peal of laughter followed the lamb's bleat. "What is all this?" said Tom, laying hold of the cur-belled against the habits of respect, and strengthened After the funeral of the old man, the "disconsolate the chorus; while the lamb, as if conscious of the

When, in due course of time, the widow again appeared young widows generally do after old husbands-and in company, she and Tom Durfy could never meet without smiling at each other. What a pleasant influence She had not been many days in her widowhood, when | lies in mutual smiles! We love the lips which welcome us without words. Such sympathetic influence it was that led the widow and Tom to get better and better acquainted, and like each other more and more, until she thought him the pleasantest fellow in the county, and he thought her the handsomest woman-besides, she had a good fortune.

The widow, conscious of her charms and her money, did not let Tom, however, lead the quietest life in the world. She liked, with the usual propensity of her sex, occasionally to vex the man she loved, and assert her "Ah, who'll see you?" exclaimed Biddy. "Come sway over so good-looking a fellow. He, in his turn, played off the widow very well; and one unfailing The widow agreed; but when Biddy asked for a horse source of mirthful reconciliation on Tom's part, whento put to the car, her brother refused, for the only | ever the widow was angry, and that he wanted to bring moment to send a lamb to the town. Biddy vowed she and coaxingly put his head over her fair shoulder, to

CHAPTER IX.

ANDY was in sad disgrace for some days with his Matters being thus accommodated, off the ladies set, mother; but, like all mothers, she soon forgave the Fortunately the season afforded him more employment than winter months would have done. But the farmers soon had all their crops made up, and when Andy "I see him coming after us round a turn o' the could find no work to be paid for, he began to cut the to Andy the opportunity of exercising a bit of his characteristic ingenuity; for when the hay was ready for "cocking," he selected a good thumping rock as the have anticipated from the appearance of the little crop In the meantime Tom Durfy closed on them fast, and as it lay on the ground; and as no vestige of the rock the haystack, and said, "God bless you, Andy, but "Pull up, Tim, pull up!" said the widow, from the in- you're the n'atest hand for putting up a bit o' hay I to admire her hay: but at last she came to sell it, and I was quite surprised. Good a price as he could afford—for Owny was an hon-"Yes, indeed," says biddy. "I was just taking a lit- est, open-hearted fellow, though he was a horse-dealer; so he paid the widow the price of her hay on the spot, and said he would draw it away at his convenience.

In a few days Owny's cars and men were sent for this purpose; but when they came to take the haystack to pieces, the solidity of its center rather astonished them-and instead of the cars going back loaded, two had their journey for nothing, and went home empty. Previously to his men leaving the widow's field, they spoke to her on the subject, and said, "'Pon my conscience, ma'am, the center o' your haystack was mighty heavy."

"Oh, indeed, it's powerful hay!" said she. " "Maybe so," said they; "but there's not much nour-ishment in that part of it."

"Not finer hay in Ireland!" said she "What's of it, ma'am," said they. "Faix, we think Mr. Doyle will be talkin' to you about it." And they Just now the Genius of Farce, who presides so par- were quite right; for Owny became indignant at being overreached, as he thought, and lost no time in going to the widow to tell her so. When he arrived at her cabin, Andy happened to be in the house; and when the widow raised her voice through the storm of Owny's rage, in protestations that she knew nothing about it, but that "Andy, the darlin', put the cock up with his own hands," then did Owny's passion gather strength.

"Oh! it's you, you vagabone, is it?" said he, shaking his whip at Andy, with whom he never had had the honor of a conversation since the memorable day when his horse was nearly killed. "So this is more o' your purty work! Bad cess to you! wasn't it enough for you to nighthand kill one o' my horses, without plottin' to chate the rest o' them?"

"Is it me chate them?" said Andy. "Throth, I wouldn't wrong a dumb baste for the world."

"Not he, indeed, Misther Doyle!" said the widow. "Arrah, woman, don't be talkin' your balderdash to me," said Doyle; "sure you took my good money for

"And sure I gave all I had to you-what more could

"Tare an' ounty, woman! who ever heerd of sich a thing as coverin' up a rock wid hay, and sellin' it as the rale thing?"

"Twas Andy done it, Mr. Doyle; hand, act, or part I hadn't in it." "Why, then, arn't you ashamed o' yourself?" said Owny Doyle, addressing Andy.

"Why would I be ashamed?" said Andy, "For ch'atin'-that's the word, since you provoke

"What I done is not ch'atin'," said Andy, "I had a blessed example for it." "Oh! do you hear this!" shouted Owny, nearly provoked to take the worth of his money out of Andy's

"Yes, I say, a blessed example," said Andy. "Sure. didn't the blessed Saint Peter build his church upon a rock, and why shouldn't I build my cock o' hay on a rock?" Owny, with all his rage, could not help laughing at the ridiculous conceit. "By this and that, Andy," said he, "you're always sayin, or doin' the quarest things in the countbry, bad cess to you!" So he laid his whip upon his little hack instead of Andy, and galloped off.

Andy went over the next day to the neighboring town, where Owny Doyle kept a little inn and a couple of post-chaises (such as they were), and expressed much sorrow that Owny had been deceived by the appearance of the hay; "but I'll pay you the differ out o' my wages, Misther Doyle-in throth I will-that is. whenever I have any wages to get: for the Squire turned me off, you see, and I'm out of place at this present."

"Oh, never mind it," said Owny. "Sure it was the widow woman got the money, and I don't begrudge it; and now that it's all past and gone, I forgive you. But tell me, Andy, what put such a quare thing into your

"Why, you see," said Andy, "I didn't like the poor mother's pride should be let down in the eyes of the neighbors; and so I made the weeshy bit o' hay look as dacent as I could-but, at the same time, I wouldn't chate any one for the world, Misther Doyle," "Throth, I b'lieve you wouldn't, Andy; but, 'pon my sowl, the next time I go buy hay, I'll take care that Saint Pether hasn't any hand in it."

Owny turned on his heel, and was walking away with an air of satisfaction which men so commonly assume after fancying they have said a good thing, when Andy interrupted his retreat by an interjectional "Misther Doyle?" "Well," said Owny, looking over his shoulder. "I was thinkin', sir," said Andy.

"For the first time in your life I b'lieve," said Owny "and what was it you wor thinkin'?" "I was thinkin' of dhrivin' a chay, sir." "And what's that to me?" said Owny

"Sure I might dhrive one o' your chaises." "And kill more o' my horses, Andy-eh? No, no. faix, I'm afeer'd o' you, Andy."

"Not a boy in Ireland knows dhrivin' betther nor me, any way," said Andy.

"Faix, it's any way and every way but the way you ought you'd dhrive, sure enough, I b'lieve; but, at all events. I don't want a post-boy, Andy-I have Micky Doolin, and his brother Pether, and them's enough for

"Maybe you'd be wantin' a helper in the stable, Misther Doyle?"

"No, Andy; but the first time I want to make hay to advantage, I'll send for you," said Owny, laughing, as he entered his house, and nodding at Andy, who returned a capacious grin to Owny's shrewd smile, like the exaggerated reflection of a concave mirror. But sequently cut a more respectable figure than one could the grin soon subsided, for men seldom prolong the laugh that is raised at their own expense: and the corners of Andy's mouth turned down as his band began telegraphing Biddy, who, according to the was visible, the widow, when she came out to see the turned up to the back of his head, which he rubbed, as

It was some miles to Andy's home, and night overtook him on the way. As he trudged along in the midside of the car, to the driver, whom she thumped on ever seen; troth, I didn't think there was the half of it die of the road he was looking up at the waning moon the back at the same time to impress upon him her in it!" Little did the widow know that the cock of hay and some few stars twinkling through the gloom, absorbed in many sublime thoughts as to their existence, and wondering what they were made of, when his cogitations were cut short by tumbling over something Just as this mancuvre was executed, up came Tom such sales are generally effected in Ireland by the pur- which lay in the middle of the highway; and on scramchaser buying "in the lump," as it is called, that is, bling to his legs again, and seeking to investigate the "How are you, Miss Riley?" said he, as he drew rein. calculating the value of the hay from the appearance cause of his fall, he was rather surprised to find a man "Pretty well, thank you," said Biddy, putting her of the stack as it stands, and drawing it away upon his lying in such a state of insensibility that all Andy's head and shoulders through the window, while the own cars. Now, as luck would have it, it was Andy's efforts could not rouse him. While he was standing early acquaintance, Owny na Coppal, bought the hay; over him, undecided as to what he should do, the and in consideration of the lone woman, gave her as sound of approaching wheels, and the rapid steps of galloping horses, attracted his attention; and it became evident that unless the chaise and pair which he now saw in advance were brought to full up, the cares of the man in the middle of the roal would be very soon over. Andy shouted lustily, but to his every "Halloo there!" the crack of the whip replied, and accelerated | speed instead of a halt was the consequence; at last, in desperation, Andy planted himself in the middle of the road, and with outspread arms before the horses, succeeded in arresting their progress, while he shouted

"Stop!" at the top of his voice.

A pistol-shot from the chaise was the consequence of Andy's summons, for a certain Mr. Furlong, a foppish young gentleman, traveling from the castle of Dublin, the cry of "Stop," on a horrid Irish road; and as he was reared in the ridiculous belief that every man ran a great risk of his life who ventured outside the city of the answer. Dublin he traveled with a brace of loaded pistols beside him; and as he had been anticipating murder and robbery ever since nightfall, he did not await the demand for his "money or his life" to defend both, but fired away the instant he heard the word "Stop!" and fortunate it was for Andy that the traveler's hurry impaired his aim. Before he could discharge a second pistol, Andy had screened himself under the horses' heads; and recognizing in the postillion his friend Micky Doolin, he shouted out, "Micky, jewel, don't let them be shootin' me!" Now Micky's cares were quite enough engaged on his own account: for the first pistol-shot made the horses plunge violently, and the second time Furlong blazed away set the saddle-horse kicking at such a rate, that all Micky's horsemanship was required to preserve his seat; added to which, the dread of being shot came over him, and he crouched low on the gray's neck, holding fast by the mane, and shouting for mercy as well as ready to sacrifice my daughter," said the heroic man, Andy, who still kept roaring to Mick, "not to let them be shootin' him," while he held his hat above him, in the fashion of a shield, as if that would have proved any protection against a bullet. "Who are you at all?"

said Mick.

"Andy Rooney, sure." "And what do you want?" "To save the man's life."

the postillion that he would shoot him if he did not 'Major Margery'!" dwire on, for he abjured the use of that rough letter, R, which the Irish so much rejoice in! "Dwive on you cied all that long ago, and got a cure ready for it. My the door. The servant who opened it was surprised at rascal, dwive on!" exclaimed Mr. Furlong.

friend o' my own."

fore the safer. "And what is it at all, Andy?" continued Mick. "I tell you there's a man lying dead on the road here, and sure you'll kill him, if you'll dhrive over him." "How could I kill him any more than he is kilt," says Mick, "if he's dead already."

off your horse, will you, and help me to rise him?"

Mick dismounted, and assisted Andy in lifting the ment. prostrate man from the center of the road to the slope jing the quantity of shaking and kicking they gave him. mother of invention;" but an Irish Secretary can beat I b'lieve it's drunk he is," said Mick.

again, and he'll spake."

some half-intelligent maledictions.

Mick.

"Well!" was the drunken ejaculation. Mick. "We wondhered what had kept him so late with the return shay, and that is the way it is. He tumbled off his horses, dhrunk; and where's the shay, I wonther? Oh, murdher! what will Misther Doyle say?" "What's the weason you don't dwive on?" said Mr. Furlong, putting his head out of the chaise.

"It's one on the road here, your honor, almost were, in honored position, and did killed."

"Was it wobbers?" asked Mr. Furlong.

" Maybe you'd take him into the shay wid you, sir?"

"What a wequest!-dwive on, sir!" "Sure I can't l'ave my brother on the road, sir." "Your bwother!-and you pwesume to put your bwother to wide with me? You'll put me in the debdest wage if you don't dwive on." "Faith, then, I won't dhrive on and l'ave my brother here on the road." "You rascally wappawee!" exclaimed Furlong. "See, Andy," said Micky Doolan; " will you get up and dhrive him, while I stay with Pether?"

him there, make haste back, and I'll dhrive Pether sheet of paper pinned to his back by somehome."

traveler "pwotested" against it, and threatened "pwo-tablets, ceedings" and "magistrates," Mick was unmoved in his brotherly love. As a last remonstrance, Furlon exclaimed, "And pewhaps this fellow can't wide, and don't know the woad."

time, your honor." .

postdions in me an', wanted to got that I at the confusion of the mount of the the table of 'S, rec." Andy never a coccated and it ined than that of his late master, Mr. Lyan. for the first time, on a similar employment. By the and that the more people were worse than savagway, while his name is before one, a little angestot may; With such teelings it was that this English Irishman, by appropriately in the little to of the wild employed to open negotiations between the government days. Those days were the good old days of true virtue! chaise afforded the peculiar genius of Handy Andy an When a bishop who had a whiters to narry, would opportunity of making a glorious confusion, by driving and arrow a legent to the political enemy of the sitting member into his the content was a great water of his reart, horse, where, by a curious coincidence, a strange would rive him one of his menichilden for a wile! Those greated every day on a short visit. gravity is the property in the same of the menichilden for a wile! Those greated every day on a short visit. Were the days when, the country being in danger, After Andy had driven some time, he turned round and after heaving civilities upon him, left him to sleep fathers were willing to sacrifice, not only their sons, spoke to Mr. Furlong, through the pane of glass with but their daughters, on the altar of patriotism! Do which the front window-frame of the chaise was not you doubt it?-unbelieving and seltish creatures of furnished. these degenerate times! Listen! A certain father waited upon the Irish Secretary, one fine morning, and | Andy. in that peculiar strain which secretaries of state must be pretfy well used to, descanted at some length upon | Furlong, "when you quied stop on the woad: wobbers the devotion he had always shown to the government, always quied stop, and I took you for a wobber." and yet they had given him no proof of their confidence. The Secretary declared that they had the highest sense to stop at all, but they stop you without axiu, or by never dreamed that a bumane purpose could produce of his merits, and that they had given him their entire confidence.

"But you have given me nothing else, my lord," was

"My dear sir, of late we have not had any proof of sufficient weight in our gift to convince you."

"Oh, I beg your pardon, my lord; there's a majority of the -dragoons vacant."

"Very true, my dear sir; and if you had a child to off." devote to the service of your country, no one should have the majority sooner.

"Thank you, my lord," said the worthy man, with a low how; "then I have a child."

"Bless me, sir! I never heard you had a son."

"No, my lord, but I have a daughter." "A daughter!" said my Lord Secretary, with a look of surprise; "but you forget, sir-this is a regimenta dragoon regiment."

"Oh, she rides elegant," said her father.

"But, my dear sir—a woman?" "Why shouldn't a woman do her duty, my lord, as well as a man, when the country is in danger? I'm with an air worthy of Virginius.

"My dear sir, this is really impossible; you know it's impossible.15 there are ten friends of mine who have not made up their demanded his call for entrance. minds yet."

"My dear sir," said the Lord Secretary, squeezing his er; "cawn't you wing?" The last words only caught the ear of the frightened hand with vehement friendship, "why place us in this

"Oh, my lord," said the father quickly, "I have fanwife not having been blessed with boys, we thought it "There's no fear o' you, sir," said Blicky, "it's a wise to make the girls ready for any chance that might Mr. Furlong was not quite satisfied that he was there- second Jack, and the third Tom; which enables us to call them Georgina, Jacqueline, and Thomasine, in company, while the secret of their real names rests between ourselves and the parish register. Now, my lord, what do you say? I have George, Jack, and Toni -think of your bill!" The argument was conclusive, and the patriotic man got the majority of a cavalry "Well, no matther for that," says Andy. "'Light corps, with perpetual leave of absence for his daughter Jack, who would much rather have joined the regi-

Such were the days in which our Furlong flourished; of turf which bordered its side. They judged he was and in such days it will not be wondered at that a not dead, however, from the warmth of the body; but secretary, when he had no place to give away, invented that he should still sleep seemed astonishing, consider- one. The old saying has it, that "Necessity is the necessity hollow. For example: "He gave a grunt that time," said Andy; "shake him A commission was issued, with a handsome salar, to the commissioner, to make a measurement through To a fresh shaking the drunken man at last gave all the streets of Dublin, ascertaining the exact dissome tokens of returning consciousness, by making tances from the Castle, from a furlong upward: and several winding blows at his benefactors, and uttering for many a year did the commission work, inserting handsome stone slabs into walls of most ignorant "Bad luck to you do you, know where you are?" said | houses, till then unconscious of their precise proximity or remoteness from the seat of government. Ever after that, if you saw some portly building, blushing in "By this and that, it's my brother Pether," said the pride of red brick, and perfumed with fresh paint, and saw the tablet recording the interesting fact thus-

FROM THE CASTLE, ONE FURLONG.

Fancy might suggest that the house rejoiced, as it

"look so fine, and smell so sweet,"

because it was under the nose of viceroyalty, while the suburbs revealed poor tatterdemalion tenements, dropping their slates like tears, and uttering their hollow sighs through empty casements, merely because they short, there are so many wags. were "one mile two furlongs from the Castle," But the new stone tablet which told you so seemed to mock their misery, and looked like a fresh stab into their poor old sides; as if the rapier of a king had killed a

This very original measure of measurement was provocative of ridicule or indignation, as the impatient inight happen to be infected, but while the affair was "To be sure I will," said Andy; "where is he goin'?" in full blow, Mr. Furlong, who was the commissioner. "To the Squire's," said Mick; "and when you I'ave while walking in Sackville-street, one day, had a goodly

"sweet Roman hand," Andy mounted into Mick's saddle; and although the bearing, in large letters, the inversion of one of his own and as he swaggered along in conscious dignity, he "Is it not known the road to the Squire's?-wow! wondered at the shouts of hughter ringing behind him, wow!" said Andy. "It's I that'll rattle you there in no and turned round occasionally to see the cause, but ever as he turned, faces were screwed up in seriousness. "Well, wattle away then!" said the enraged traveler, while the laughter rung again in his rear. Furlong was as he threw himself back in the chaise, cursing all the bewildered, and much as he was used to the mirthfulness of an Irish populace, he certainly did wonder what Now, it was to a Carady's that Mr. Farler; flend of fun possessed them that day, until the hall fusion to Egan, and success to O'Grady." porter of the secretary's office solved the enigma by name of O'Cr., ly was never once mentioned; and with respectfully asking would be not take the placard from sipped his claret. "These livish are so wild-so unculhis back before he presented himself. The Mister Furlong who is engaged in our story was the nephewor Mr. Furlouz, it has been stated, was an official of the man of measurement memory; and his mother, a To din Castle, and help and spatched on election certing videar woman, sent her son to England to be elecated. the same name which ld a hierarive post under Inglish ax at!" And, accordingly, the vontal endead . A gramment, and was well known as an actional entral local all he could to be come "be have excepthing, and is an airs requiring what in Ir land was called "Cartle was targht to believe that all the victor and wisdom in matuence;" and this, his relative, was now dispatched. Trefand was vested in the cardle and honzers on there of wargery prevaling in the streets of Dublin in those and Squire O'Grady, vilited the wilds of Iroland; and the circumstances attendant on the stopping of the

ONE FURLONG FROM THE CASTLE.

"Faix, you wor nigh shootin' me, your honor," said

"I should not wepwoach myself, if I had," said Mr

"Faix, the robbers here, your honor, never axes you your l'ave, or wid your l'ave. Sure, I was only afcerd you'd dhrive over the man in the road." "What was the man in the world doing?"

dhrunk, sir," "The postillion said it was his bwother,"

"Nothin' at all, faith, for he wasn't able; he was

"Yis, your honor, and he's a postillion himself—onthe lost his horses and the shay-he got drank, and for "Those wascally postillions often get dwank, I suppose you

"Oh, common enough, sir, particular now about the 'lection time; for the gintlemm is dhrivin' over the country like mad, right and left, and gives the boys money to dhrink their health, till they are killed a'most with the falls they get."

"Then postillions often fall on the woads here?"

"Throth the roads is covered with them sometimes, when the 'lections comes an,"

"What howwid immowality! I hope you're not dwunk?"

"Faix, I wish I was!" said Andy. "H's a great while since I had a dhrop; but it won't be long so, when your honor gives me something to drink your health."

"Well, don't talk, but dwive on." All Andy's further endeavors to get "his honor" in-"I know no such thing, my lord. But I'll tell you to conversation were unavailing; so he whipped on in what I know: there's a bill coming on next week-and silence till his arrival at the gate-house of Merryvale

"What are you shouting there for?" said the travel-

"Oh, they understand the shilloo as well, sir;" and in Furlong; and as the phrase "his life" seemed a per- dreadful difficulty? It would be impossible even to confirmation of Andy's assurance, the bars of the ensonal threat to himself, he swore a trembling outh at draw up the commission; - lancy, 'Major Maria,' or trance gates were withdrawn, and the post-chaise rattied up the avenue to the house.

Andy alighted, and gave a thundering tantara-ra at the sight of Andy, and could not repress a shout of wonder. Here Dick Dawson came into the hall, and turn up, and so we christened the eldest George, the seeing Andy at the door, gave a loud halloo, and clapped his hands in delight—for he had not seen him since the day of the chase.

"An' is it there you are again, you unlucky vagabone?" said Dick; "and what brings you here?"

"I come with a jintleman to the masther, Misther

"Oh, it's the visitor, I suppose," said Dick, as he him self went out, with that unceremonious readiness so characteristic of the wild fellow he was, to open the door of the chaise for his brother-in-law's guest,

"You're welcome," said Dick; "come, step in—the servants will look to your luggage. James, get in Mr. ---, I beg your pardon, but 'pon my soul, I forgot your name, though Moriarty told me," "Mr. Furlong," gently uttered the youth.

"Get in the luggage, James. Come, sir, walk into the dinner-room; we haven't finished our wine yet." With these words Dick ushered in Furlong to the apartment where Squire Egan sat, who rose as they entered. "Mr. Furlong, Ned," said Dick.

"Happy to see you, Mr. Furlong," said the hearty squire, who shook Furlong's hand in what Furlong con sidered a most savage manner. "You seem fatigued?" "Vewy," was the lauguid reply of the traveler, as he threw himself into a chair, "Ring the bell for more claret, Dick," said Squire

"I neveh dwink,"

Dick and the squire both looked at him with amazement, for in the friend of Moriarty they expected to find a hearty fellow.

"A cool bottle wouldn't do a child any harm," said the squire. "Ring, Dick. And now, Mr. Furlong, tell I us how you like the country." " Not much, I pwotest,

"What do you think of the people?"

"Oh, I don't know-you'll pawdon me, but-a-in "Oh, there are wags enough, I grant; not funnier devils in the world."

"But I mean wags—tatters, I mean."

"Oh, rags. Oh, yes-why, indeed, they've not much clothes to spare." "And yet these wetches are fweeholders, I'm told."

"Ay, and stout voters, too," "Well, that all we wequire. By-the-by, how goes on the canvass, squire?" "Famously."

"Oh, wait till I explain to you our plan of opewations from read-quaters. You'll see how famously we shall wally at the hustings. These Irrish have no idea of tautics: we'll introduce the English mode-take them by supwise. We must unseat him."

"Unseat who?" said the squire. "That-a-Egan, I think you call him."

The squire opened his eyes; but Dick, with the ready devilment that was always about him, saw how the land lay in an instant, and making a rignal to his brother-in-law, chimed in with an immediate assent to Furlong's assertion, and swore that Egan would be unseated to a certainty. "Come, sir," added Dick, "fill one bumper at least to a toast I propose: Here's 'Con-

"Success to O'Gwady," faintly echoed Furlong, as he tivated," he continued; "you'll see how I'll supwise them with some of my plans," "Oh, they're poor ignorant brutes," said Dick, "that know nothing: a man of the world like you would buy and sell them.'

"You see, they've no finesse: they have a certain do gwee of weadiness, but no depth—no weal tinesse." "Not as much as would physic a snipe," said bick who swallowed a glass of claret to conceal a smile. "What's that you say about suipes and physic?" said Furlong; "what queer things you heish do say."

"Oh, we've plenty o' queer fellows here," said Dick; but you are but taking you of 1 (."

"The twuth is, I am fatigued-vewy-and if you'd allow me, Mr. O'Gwady, I should like to go to my woom; we'll talk over business to-mowwow." "Certainly," said the squire, who was glad to get rid of him for the come was have much for his

in the camp of his enemies, and then returned to the and gain time for their side; and get out of him all the dining-room, to enjoy with the squire the laugh they were so long obliged to repress, and to drink another bottle of claret on the strength of the joke. "What shall we do with him, Dicky" said the squire.

then send him off to O'Grady-all's fair in war." "To be sure," said the squire. "Unseat me, indeed! dropped off my chair with surprise when he said it."

"And the conceit and impudence of the fellow," said Dick. "The ignorant Iwish—nothing will serve him but abusing his own countrymen! 'The ignorant Irish!'-on, is that all you learn in Oxford, my boy!just wait, my buck—if I don't astonish your weak mind, it's no matter!"

how was the mistake made?"

"The way every mistake in the country is made," said Dick. "Handy Andy drove him here."

"More power to you, Andy," said the squire. "Come, Dick, we'll drink Andy's health-this is a mistake on holding forth his cup and saucer with an affected air. the right side."

And Andy's health was drank, as well as several other healths. In short, the squire and Dick the Devil were in high glee—the dining-room rung with laughter to a late hour; and the next morning a great many empty claret bottles were on the table-and a few on the floor.

CHAPTER X.

NOTWITHSTANDING the deep potations of the squire and Dick Dawson the night before, both were too much excited by the arrival of Furlong to permit their being tation at an early hour, for the purpose of carrying on night before." prosperously the mystification so well begun on the This was said by the brazen attorney, from his seat

"Fair!" said Dick, opening his eyes in astonishment. "Why who ever heard of any one questioning anything being fair in love, or war, or electioneering? To phy's lie. be sure, it's fair—and more particularly when the conceited coxcomb has been telling us how he'll astonish phy. with his plans the poor ignorant Irish, whom he holds in such contempt. Now, let me alone, and I'll get all his plans out of him, turn him inside out like a glove, pump him as dry as a pond in the summer, squeeze him like a lemon—and let him see whether the poor ig- said Murphy. "I attribute the natural intelligence of norant Iwish, as he softly calls us, are not an overmatch for him at the finesse upon which he seems so much to pride himself." "Egad! I believe you're right, Dick," said the squire, whose qualms were quite overcome by the argument | plicity. last advanced; for if one thing more than another provoked him, it was the impertment self-conceit of preneved and cut-and-dry knowledge of the commonplaces of the world gave them a mental elevation above an intelligent people of primitive habits, whose simplicity of life is so often set down to stupidity, whose concentment under privation is frequently attributed to aziness, and whose poverty is constantly coupled with he epithet "ignorant." "A poor ignorant creature," findeed, is a common term of reproach, as if poverty and ignorance must be inseparable. If a list could he obtained of the rich ignorant people, it would be no flattering document to stick on the door of the temple of Mammon.

"Well, Ned," said Dick, "as you agree to do the Englishman, Murphy will be a grand help to us; it's the very thing he will have his heart in. Murtough will be | post?" worth his weight in gold to us; I will ride over to him and bring him back with me to spend the day here; and you, in the mean time, can put every one about the house on their guard not to spoil the fun by letting the cat out of the bag too soon; we'll shake her ourselves in good time, and maybe we won't have fun in the hunt!"

care that all shall be right at home here."

In ten minutes more Dick was in his saddle, and riding hard for Murtough Murphy's. A good horse and a sharp pair of spurs were not long in placing him vis-avis with the merry attorney, whom he found in his stable-yard up to his eyes in business with some ragged country fellows, the majority of whom were loud in think, for you wetu'ning an answer." vociferating their praises of certain dogs; while Murtough drew from one of them, from time to time. a solemn assurance, given with many significant shakes of the head, and uplifting of hands and eyes, "that was | rewy odd you Iwish are!" the finest badger in the world!" Murtough turned his head on hearing the rattle of the borse's feet, as Dick the Devil dashed into the stable-yard, and with a viewhalloo welcomed him.

"You're just in time, Dick. By the powers! we'll have the finest day's sport you've seen for some time." "I think we shall," said Dick, "if you come with me." Ay, "No; but you come with me," said Murtough. "The Squire?"

grandest badger-fight, sir." "Pooh!" returned Dick; "I've better fun for you."

He then told them of the accident that conveyed their political enemy into their toils; "and the beauty of it is," said Dick, "that he has not the remotest suspicion of the condition he's in, and fancies himself able to buy and sell all Ireland-horse-dealers and attorneys included."

"That's elegant!" said Murphy. "He's come to enlighten us, Murtough," said Dick.

"And maybe, we won't return the compliment," said Murtough. "Just let me put on my boots. Hilloa, you mission-" Larry! saddle the gray. Don't you cut the pup's ears till I come home! and if Mr. Ferguson sends over for the draft of the lease, tell him it won't be ready till tomorrow. Molly! Molly! where are you, you old divil? Sew on that button for me-I forgot to tell you yesterday-make haste! I won't delay you a moment, Dick. high," Stop a minute, though. I say, Lanty Houligan-mind, on your peril, you old vagabone, don't let them fight that badger without me. Now, Dick, I'll be with you in the twinkling of a bedpost, and do the Englishman, and that smart! Bad back to their conceit! they think we can do nothing regular in Ireland."

On his arrival at Merryvale and hearing how matters stood, Murtough Murphy was in a perfect agony of delight in anticipating the mystification of the kidnapped agent. Dick's intention had been to take him along with them on their canvass, and openly engage him in party on their guard, and, maybe, help to unseat our all their election earing movements; but to this Murphy objected, as running too great a risk of discovery. He electioneering plot of the other party, indirectly; but to have as little real electioneering business as possible. "If you do, Dick," said Murphy, "take my word, we shall betray ourselves somehow or other-he could not "Pump him as dry as a lime-kiln," said Dick, "and be so soft as not to see it; but let us be content to two feet above the floor, while he looked up in the face of amuse him with all sorts of absurd stories of Irelandand the Irish-tell him magnificent lies-astonish him > up to publish—that's the plan, sir!" The three conspirators now joined the family party, which had just sat down to breakfast; Dick, in his own jolly way, hoped Furlong had slept well. nate Fanny Dawson, who, when Furlong addressed to room to hide her laughter. "Faith, he has brought his pigs to a pretty market her his first silly commonplace, with his peculiar nonhere," said the squire; "but how did he come here? pronunciation of the letter R, established a lisp di- of the poll, we should pwopose, as it were, with a view rectly, and it was as much as her sister, Mrs. Egan, could do to keep her countenance, as Fanny went on ministe'd on either side." slaughtering the S's as fast as Furlong ruined R's.

"I'll twouble you for a little mo' queam," said he, "Perhapth you'd like thum more theugar," lisped Fanny, lifting the sugar-tongs with an exquisite curl of her little finger.

"I'm glad to hear you slept well," said Dick to Fur- Macassar-oiled ringlets.

"To be sure he slept well," said Murphy; "this is the sleepiest air in the world."

"The sleepiest air?" returned Furlong, somewhat surprised. "That's vewy odd."

"Not at all, sir," said Murphy; "well-known fact. When I first came to this part of the country, I used to sleep for two days together sometimes. Whenever I laggards in the morning; they were up and in consul- wanted to rise early, I was always obliged to get up the

at a side-table, which was amply provided with a large "Now, first of all, Dick," said the squire, "is it fair, dish of boiled potatoes, capacious jugs of milk, a quantity of cold meat and game. Murphy had his mouth half filled with potatoes as he spoke, and swallowed a large draught of milk as the stranger swallowed Mur-

"You don't eat potatoes, I perceive, sir," said Mur-

"Not for bweakfast," said Furlong. "Do you for thupper?" lisped Fanny "Never in England," he replied.

"Finest things in the world, sir, for the intellect," the Irish entirely to their eating them."

"Oh, they are thometimes the thleepy at the Cathtle," said Fanny.

"Weally!" said the exquisite, with the utmost sim-"Fanny is very provoking, Mr. Furlong," said Mrs.

Egan, who was obliged to say something with a smile, suming and shallow strangers, who fancied their hack- to avoid the laugh which continued silence would have forced upon her. "Oh, no!" said the dandy, looking tenderly at Fanny;

"only vewy agweable-fond of a little wepa'tee." "They call me thatirical here," said Fanny, "only fanthy!" and she cast down her eyes with an exquisite whibble of a bone at the end of it?" affectation of innocence.

"By-the-by, when does your post awive here-the mail I mean?" said Furlong.

"About nine in the morning," said the squire.

"And when does it go out?" "About one in the afternoon,"

"And how far is the post town fwom your house?"

"About eight or nine miles." "Then you can answer your letters by wetu'n of

"Oh dear, no!" said the squire; "the boy takes any letters that may be for the post the following morning, as he goes to the town to look for letters."

"But you lose a post by that," said Furlong. "And what matter?" said the squire.

The official's notions of regularity were somewhat startled by the squire's answer; so he pushed him with "You're right, Dick. Murphy is the very man for a few more questions. In reply to one of the last, the twice a day by the present arrangement.

"Ay, but you lose a post, my dear sir," said Furlong, who still clung with pertinacity to the fitness of saving a post. "Don't you see that you might weceive your letter at half-past ten; well, then you'll-have a full hour to wite you' answer; that's quite enough time, I should

"But, my dear sir," said Murtough Murphy, "our grand object in Ireland is not to answer letters. "Oh!-ah!-hum!-indeed-well, that's odd; how

"Sure, that's what makes us such pleasant fellows," said Murtough, "If we were like the rest of the world. there would be nothing remarkable about us; and who'd care for us?"

"Well, Mr. Muffy, you say such queer thingsweally. "Ay, and I do queer things sometimes-don't I,

"There's no denying it, Murphy."

"Now, Mr. O'Gwady," said Furlong, "had we not better talk over our election business? "Oh, hang business to-day!" said Murphy: "let's have some fishing: I'll show you such salmon-fishing as you never saw in your life." "What do you say, Mr. O'Gwady?" said Furlong. "Faith, I think we might as well amuse ourselves." "But the election is weally of such consequence; I should think it would be a wema kably close contest. and we have no time to lose; I should think-with sub-"My dear sir," said Murphy, "we'll beat them hollow: our canvass has been most prosperous; there's river." only one thing I'm afraid of."

"What's that?" said Furlong." "That Egan has money; and I'm afraid he'll bribe

"As for bwibewy, neve' mind that," said Furlong, with a very wise nod of his head and a sagacious wink. "We'll spend money too. We've pwepawed for that: plenty of money will be advanced, for the gov'nment is weally anxious that Mr. Scatte hwain should come

"Oh, then, all's right!" said Murphy. "But-whisper Mr. Furlong-be cautious how you mention money, for there are sharp fellows about here, and there's no knowing how the wind of the word might put the other man upon a petition. "Oh, let me alone," said Furlong. "I know a twick recommended rather to engage Furlong in amusements too many for that them catch me betwaying a which would detain him from O'Grady and his party, seewet! No, no - touter too sharp for that!"

"Oh! don't suppose, my dear sir," said Murphy-"that I doubt your caution for a moment. I see, sir, in the twinkling of an eye, a man's character-always did-always could, since I was the hight o' that;" and Murphy stooped down and extended his hand about the man he was humbugging with the most unblushing impudence-"since I was the hight o' that, sir, I had a he was near it, sure enough, for I thought I'd have with grand materials for a note-book, and work him natural quickness for discerning character; and I see you're a young gentleman of superior acuteness and discretion; but, at the same time, don't be angry with me for just hinting to you, that some of these Irish chaps are d-d regues. I beg your pardon, Mrs. "Vewy," said Furlong, as he sipped his tea with an O'Grady, for saying d-n before a lady;" and he made air of peculiar nonchalance which was meant to fasci- a low bow to Mrs. Egan, who was obliged to leave the

> "Now," said Furlong, "suppose befo'e the opening to save time, that the bwibery oath should not be ad

"That's an elegant idea!" said Murphy. "By the wig o' the chief justice-and that's a big oath-you're a janius, Misther Furlong, and I admire you. Sir. you're worth your weight in gold to us!"

"Oh, you flatte' mel-weally," said Furlong, with affected modesty, while he ran his fingers through his

"Well, now for a start to the river, and won't we have sport! You English-taught gentlemen have only one fault on the face of the earth-you're too fond of business-you make yourselves slaves to proprietythere's no fun in you,"

"I beg pawdon-there," said Furlong, "we like fun in good time."

"Ah; but there's where we beat you," said Murphy, triumphantly; "the genuine home-bred Paddy makes time for fun sooner than anything else-we take our own way, and live the longer.

"Ahl you lose your time-though-excuse me; you lose your time, indeed." "Well, 'divil may care,' as Punch said when he lost mass, 'there's more churches nor one,' says he, and that's the way with us," said Murphy. "Come, Dick, et the fishing-lines ready; heigh for the salmon-Hshery! You must know, Misther Furlong, we fish for salmon with line here."

"I don't see how you could fish any other way," said the dandy, smiling at Murphy, as if he had caught him in saying something absurd.

"Ah, you rogue," said Murphy, affecting to be hit; "you're too sharp for us poor Irish fellows; but you know the old saying, 'An Irishman has leave to speak twice; but, after all, it's no great mistake I've made: for when I say we fish for salmon with a line, I mean we don't use a rod, but a leaded line, the same as in seafishing."

"How vewy extwao'dinary! Why, I should think that impossible," "And why should it be impossible?" said Murphy, with the most unabashed impudence. "Have not all nations habits and customs peculiar to themselves? Don't the English catch their fish by striking them under the water with a long rough stick, and a little cur-

"Speawing them, you mean," said Furlong "Ay, you know the right name, of course; but isn't that quite as odd, or more so than our way here?" "That's vewy twue indeed; but your sea-line fishing in a wiver, and for salmon, strikes me as vewy singu-

"Well, sir, the older we grow the more we learn. You'll see what fine sport it is; but don't lose any more time: let us be off to the river at once."

"I'll make a slight change in my dwess, if you please -I'll be down immediately;" and Furlong left the room. During his absence, the Squire, Dick, and Murphy enjoyed a hearty laugh, and ran over the future proceedings of the day,

"But what do you mean by this salmon-fishing, Murphy?" said Dick; "you know there never was a salmon in the river." "But there will be to-day," said Murphy; "and a our money. Do you be off for him, and I will take squire represented that the post-boy was saved going magnificent gudgeon will see him caught. What a spoon that fellow is!-we've got the bribery out of him "You did that well, Murphy," said the Squire.

"Be at him again when he comes down," said Dick. "No, no," said Murphy, "let him alone; he is so conceited about his talent for business, that he will be talking of it without our pushing him: just give him rope enough, and he'd hang himself; we'll have the whole of their campaign out before the day is over."

CHAPTER XI. ALL men love to gain their ends; most men are contented with the shortest road to them, while others like by-paths. Some carry an innate love of triumph to a pitch of epicurism, and are not content unless the triumph be achieved in a certain way, making collateral passions accessories before or after the fact; and Murphy was one of the number. To him a triumph without fun was beef without mustard, lamb without salad, turbot without lobster sauce. Now, to entangle Furlong in their meshes was not sufficient for him; to detain him from his friends, every moment betraying something of their electioneering movements, though sufficiently ludicrous in itself, was not enough for Murtough!—he would make his captive a source of ridiculo as well as profit, and while plenty of real amusements might have served this end, to divert the stranger for the day, this mock fishing-party was planned to brighten with fresh beams the halo of the ridiculous which already encircled the magnanimous Furlong.

"I'm still in the dark," said Dick, " about the salmon As I said before, there never was a salmon in the "But, as I said before," replied Murphy, "there will be to-day; and you must help me in playing off the trick."

"But what is this trick? Confound you, you're as mysterious as a chancery suit." "I wish I was likely to last half as long," said Murphy.

"The trick!" said Dick. "Bad luck to you, tell me the trick, and don't keep me waiting, like a poor relation."

"You have two boats on the river?" said Murphy.

"Well, you must get into one with our victim; and I can get into the other with the salmon." "But where's the salmon, Murphy?"

"In the house, for I sent one over this morning, a present to Mrs. E.can. You must keep away about thirty yards or so, when we get affoat that our dear friend may not perceive the trick-and in proper time

I will hook my dead salmon on one of my lines, drop him over the off-side of the boat, pass him round to the gunwale within view of our intelligent castle customer, make a great outcry, swear I have a noble bite, haul up my fish with an enormous splash, and, affecting to kill him in the boat, hold up my salmon in triumph.

"He'll smoke the salmon sooner. Never mind, if I don't hoax him; I'll bet you what you like he's done." "I hear him coming down stairs," said the squire.

"Then send off the salmon in a basket by one of the boys, Dick," said Murphy; "and you, Squire, may go about your canvass, and leave us in care of the enemy," All was done as Murphy proposed, and, in something less than an hour, Furlong and Dick in one boat, and Murphy and his attendant gossoon in another, were afloat on the river, to initiate the Dublin citizen into the tnysteries of this new mode of salmon-fishing.

The sport at first was slack, and no wonder; and Furlong began to grow tired, when Murphy hooked on his salmon, and gently brought it round under the water within range of his victim's observation.

"This is wather dull work," said Furlong. "Wait awhile, my dear sir; they are never lively in biting so early as this-they're not set about feeding in earnest yet. Hilloa! by the hokey I have him!" shouted Murphy. Furlong looked on with great anxiety, as Murphy made a well-feigned struggle with a heavy fish.

eestacy. "He's kicking like a two-year old. I have him, though, as fast as the rock o' Dunamase. Come can. Now our horses in this country are celebrated up, you thief!" cried he, with an exulting shout, as he pulled up the salmon with all the splash he could produce; and suddenly whipping the fish over the side into the boat, he began flapping it about as if it were plung- larly arguing against Dick's mendacious absurdity. ing in the death struggle. As soon as he had affected juror, who was quite taken in by the feint, and protested his surprise loudly.

"Oh! that's nothing to what we'll do yet. If the day, and swims," should become a little more overcast, we'd have splendid sport, sir."

"Well, I could not have believed, if I hadn't seen it," said Furlong.

"Oh! you'll see more than that, my boy, before we've'done with them."

"But I haven't got even a bite yet!"

"Nor I either," said Dick; "you're not worse off than I am,"

fish wise since I have been on the wiver." Dick. "The d-I such cunning brutes I ever met with face and storming at him. How all this party came as the fish in this river; now, if you were at a distance there, it is necessary to explain. When Handy Andy from the bank, you'd see them jumping as lively as had deposited Furlong at Merryvale, he drove back to grasshoppers. Whisht! I think I had a nibble."

Murphy. " Vewy poo' indeed," said Furlong, dolefully.

bait lively-you're not up to the way of fascinating them yet. "Why, no; its wather noo to me."

us. It's a bran new invention in the fishing line. kicking the traces (which were very willing to break) Billy," said he to the gossoon, who was in the boat with into pieces; and Andy, by sticking to the neck of the him, "we must catch a salmon again to divart that, horse he rode, got out of the water. The horses got strange gentleman-hook him on, my buck."

the boy entered into the fun of the thing heart and Owny Doyle was roused from his bed by the neighing soul, and as he hooked on the salmon for a second of the horses at the gate of the inn. Great was his baul, he interlarded his labors with such ejaculations surprise at the event, as, half clad, and a candle in his 2s, "Oh, Misther Murphy, sir, but you're the funny hand, he saw two pair of horses, one chaise, and no gintleman. Oh, Misther Murphy, sir, how soft the driver, at his door. The next morning the plot thickstranger is, sir. The salmon's ready for ketchin' now, ened. Squire O'Grady came to know if a gentleman sir. Will you ketch him yet, sir?"

"Coax him round, Billy," said Murphy. The young imp executed the maneuver with adroitness; and Murphy was preparing for another haul, as arrived of the post-chaise being upset in the river.

Furlong's weariness began to manifest itself. know, I think I've no chance of any spo't."

Murphy; "just have it to say you killed a salmon in the gentleman was dhrownded in the river in a post-chaise," man to Squire Egan's!—and there he was in that boat new style. The day is promising better. I'm sure O'Grady set off directly with a party to have the river I showed you five minutes agone." we'll have sport yet. Hilloa! I've another!" and Mur- dragged, and near the spot encountering Handy Andy, phy began hauling in the salmon. "Billy, you rescal, get ready; watch him-that's it-mind him now!" Billy put out his gaff to seize the prize, and, making a grand swoop, affected to miss the fish. "Gaff him, you be off!"

"Oh, he's so lively, sir!" roared Billy; "he's a rogue, sir-he won't let me put the gaff undher him, sir-ow, he slipped away again."

"Make haste, Billy, or I can't hold him." "Oh, the thief!" said Billy; "one would think he was cotcht before, he's so up to it. Ha!-hurroo!-I have amazement. him now, sir." Billy made all the splash he could in the water as Murphy lifted the fish to the surface and are going to drown him, maybe." swung him into the boat. Again there was the floppin; and the riot, and Billy screeching, "Kill him. sir !-kill him, sir!-or he'll be off out o' my hands!" In proper time the fish was killed and shown up in triumph, and the imposture completed. And now Furlong began to experience that peculiar longing for catching a fish, which always possesses men who see fish taken by others; and the desire to have a salmon of his own killing induced him to remain on the river. In the long intervals of idleness which occurred somewhat horrifled. between the occasional hooking up of the salmon, which Murphy did every now and then, Furlong would he talking about business to Dick Dawson, so that they had not been very long upon the water until Dick became enlightened on some more very important points connected with the election. Murphy now pushed his loat on toward the shore. "You're not going yet?" said the anxious fisherman;

"do wait till I catch a fish!"

"Certainly," said Murphy; "I'm only going to put Billy ashore, and send home what we've already caught. Mrs. O'Grady is passionately fond of salmon.

Billy was landed, and a large basket, in which the salmon had been brought down to the boat, was landed also-empty; and Murphy, lifting the basket as if it contained a considerable weight, placed it on Billy's Boat-Song, to drown Andy's roar, and when he howledhead, and the sly young rascal bent beneath it, as if all the fish Murphy had pretended to take were really in stop, as if the load were too much for him.

"That boy," said Furlong, "will never be able to gawwy all those fish to the house.'

"Oh, they won't be too much for him," said Dick. be seemed to have such pleasure in pulling, and looked phy, has had all the sport; but he's the best fisherman in the county—I'll own that."

the river, and on opening a new reach of the stream, a somewhat extraordinary scene of fishing presented "It's a capital notion, Murphy, if he doesn't smoke itself. It was not like Murphy's fishing—the result of a fertile invention-but the consequence of the evil des- the boat. tiny which presided over all the proceedings of Handy Andy. The fishing-party in the boats beheld another bled up again. fishing-party on shore, with this difference in the nature of what they sought to catch, that while they in the hoats were looking for salmon, those on shore were seeking for a post-chaise; and as about the third part of a vehicle, so-called, was apparent above the water, Furlong exclaimed, with extreme surprise:

"Well, if it ain't a post-chaise!" "Oh! that's nothing extraordinary," said Dick; "common enough here."

"How do you mean?" "We've a custom here of running steeple-chases in post-chaises." "Oh, thank you," said Furlong. "Come, that's too

"You don't believe it, I see," said Dick. "But you did not believe the salmon-fishing till you saw it." "Oh, come, now! How the deuce could you leap a ditch in a post-chaise?"

"I never said we leaped ditches; I only said we rode steeple-chases. The system is this: You go for a given Squire. "By this and that, he's a whopper!" cried Murphy in | point, taking high-road, by-road, plain, or lane, as the case may be, making the best of your way how you for being good swimmers, so it's a plan to shirk a bridge sometimes by swimming a river."

"But no post-chaise will float," said Furlong, regu-

"Oh! we are prepared for that here. The chaises to kill it, he held it up in triumph before the Castle con- are made light, have cork bottoms, and all the solid work is made hollow; the doors are made water tight, and, if the stream runs strong, the passenger jumps out

"But that's not fair," said Furlong; "it alters the

"Oh! it's allowed on both sides," said Dick, "so it's all the same. It's as good for the goose as the gander." "I wather imagine it is much fitter for geese and ganders than human beings. I know I should wather be a goose on the occasion."

All this time they were nearing the party on shore, and as the post-chaise became more developed, so did "But how extwao'dinawy it is that I have not seen a the personages on the bank of the river; and among these Dick Dawson saw Handy Andy in the custody of "That's because they see us watching them," said two men, and Squire O'Grady shaking his fist in his pick up the fallen postillion and his brother on the road; "You don't seem to have good sport there," shouted but before he reached them, he had to pass a publichouse—I say had to pass—but he didn't. Andy stopped, as every honorable postillion is bound to do, to drink "Play your line a little," said Murphy; "keep the the health of the gentleman who gives him the last half-crown: and he was so intent on "doing that same," equivocal afterward. In short, he drove the post-"Faith!" said Murphy to himself, "it's new to all of | chaise into the river; the horses got disentangled by home without the post-chaise, and the other post-"Yes, sir," said Billy, with delighted eagerness, for chaise and pair got home without a postillion, so that had arrived at the town on his way to Neck-or-Nothing Hall. The answer was in the affirmative. Then "Where was he?" became a question. Then the report Then came stories of postillions falling off, of pos- countrymen, "we must drag the river," "Do you intend wemaining here all day? Do you tillions being changed, of Handy Andy being employed he ordered him to be seized, and accused him of murdering his friend.

It was in this state of things that the boats approached the party on land, and the moment Dick thief, gaff him!" shouted Murphy; "gaff him, or he'll | Dawson saw Handy Andy, he put out his oars and pulled away as hard as he could. At the moment he Furlong and Dick to O'Grady, he shouted, "There he is!-there he is!-I never murdhered him! There he is!-stop him! Misther Dick, stop, for the love of God!" "What is all this about?" said Furlong, in great

"To dwown him?" said Furlong, in horror. "If he has luck," said Dick, "they'll only give him a good ducking; but we had better have nothing to do with it. I would not like you to be engaged in one of these popular riots."

"I shouldn't wellish it myself," said Furlong. "Pull away, Dick," said Murphy; "let thein kill the blackguard, if they like."

"But will they kill him weally?" inquired Furlong, "'Faith, it's just as the whim takes them," said

Murphy; "but as we wish to be popular on the hustings, we must let them kill as many as they please." Andy still shouted loud enough to be heard: "Misther Dick, they're goin' to murdher me."

"Poo' w'etch!" said Furlong, with a very uneasy shudder.

"Maybe you'd think it right for us to land, and resone him," said Murphy, affecting to put about the boat. "Oh, by no means," said Furlong. "You're bettaw

"Then we'll row back to dinner as fast as we can," said Murphy. "Pull away, my hearties!" and, as he bent to his oars, he began bellowing the Canadian

"Our voices keep tune," words; but as he added-

"Our oars keep time,"

"Curse the fish! I wish they'd bite. That thief, Mur- so lively and florid, that Furlong, chilled by his inactivity on the water, requested Murtough to let him have an oar to restore circulation by exercise. Murtough The two boats all this time had been drifting down | complied; but the novice had not pulled many strokes, before his awkwardness produced that peculiar effect called "catching a crab," and a smart blow upon his chest sent him heels over head under the thwarts of

"Wha-wha-a-t's that?" gasped Furlong, as he scram-

"You only caught a crab," said Murtough.

"Good Heaven!" said Furlong, "you don't mean te say there are crabs as well as salmon in the wiver?" "Just as many crabs as salmon," said Murtough; "pull away, my hearty.

"Row brothers, row-the stream runs fast, The rapids are near, and the daylight's past!"

CHAPTER XII.

THE boats doubled round an angle in the river, and Andy was left in the hands of Squire O'Grady, still threatening vengeance; but Andy, as long as the boats remained in sight, heard nothing but his own sweet voice shouting at the top of its pitch, "They're going to murdher mel-Misther Dick-Misther Dick, come back for the love o' God!"

"What are you roaring like a bull for?" said the Why wouldn't I roar, sir? A bull would roar if he had as much rayson."

"A bull has more reason than ever you had, you calf." said the Squire. "Sure there he is, and can explain it all to you," said

Andy, pointing after the boats.

"Who is there?" asked the squire. "Misther Dick, and the jintleman I dhruv there."

"Drove where?" "To the Squire's." "What Squire's?"

"Squire Egan's, to be sure."

"Hold your tongue, you rascal; you're either drunk still, or telling lies. The gentleman I mean wouldn't go to Mister Egan's; he was coming to me."

"That's the gintleman I dhruv-that's all I know. He was in the shay, and was nigh shootin' me; and Mickey Doolin stopped on the road, when his brother was nigh killed, and towld me to get up, for he wouldn't go no further, when the jintleman objected-" "What did the gentleman object to?" "He objected to Pether goin' into the shay."

"Who is Peter?"

"Pether Doolin, to be sure." "And what brought Peter Doolin there?"

" He fell off the horses..." "Wasn't it Mick Doolin you said was driving but a moment ago?" "Ay, sir, but that was th' other shay."

"What other chaise, you vagabond?"

"Th' other shay, your honor, that I never see at all, good or bad-only Pether." "What diabolical confusion you are making of the

as they say in Ireland, that Andy's driving became very story, to be sure! There's no use in talking to you here. I see. Bring him after me," said the Squire to some of his people standing by. "I must keep him in custody till something more satisfactory is made out about the

"Sure it's not makin' a presner of me you'd be?" said

"You shall be kept in confinement, you scoundrel, till something is heard of this strange gentleman, I'm afraid he's drowned."

"D-I a dhrowned. I dhruv him to Squire Egan's, I'll take my book oath," "That's downright nonsense, sir. He would as soon go into Squire Egan's house as go to Fiddler's Green."* "Faith, then, there's worse places than Fiddler's Green," said Andy, "as some people may find out one o' these days."

"I think, boys," said O'Grady, to the surrounding

"Dhrag the river if you pl'ase," said Andy; "but for to take the gentleman to the place; and out of these the tendher mercy o' Heaven, don't dhrag me to jail! "Oh, wait till you hook one fish, at all events," said materials the story became current, that "an English By all the crosses in a yard o'check, I dhruv the jintle-

> "Bring him after me," said O'Grady. "The fellow is drunk still, or forgets all about it; I must examine him again. Take him over to the hall, and lock him up till I go home."

"Arrah sure, your honor," said Andy, commencing an appeal,

"If you say another word, you scoundrel," said the did so, Andy caught sight of him, and pointing out Squire, shaking his whip at him, "I'll commit you to jail this minute. Keep a sharp eye after him, Molloy," were the last words of the Squire to a stout-built peasant, who took Andy in charge as the Squire mounted his horse and rode away.

Andy was marched off to Neck-or-Nothing Hall; and "Oh, he's a process-server," said Dick; "the people in compliance with the Squire's orders, locked up in the justice-room. This was an apartment where the Squire, in his magisterial capacity, dispensed what he called justice, and what he possibly meant to be such; but poor Justice coming out of Squire O'Grady's hands was something like the little woman in the song, who, having her petticoats cut short while she was asleep, exclaimed on her waking:

"As sure as I'm a little woman, this is none of I;" only that Justice, in the present instance, did not doubt her identity from her nakedness, but from the peculiar dressing Squire O'Grady bestowed upon hershe was so muffled up in O'Gradyism that her own mother (who, by the same token, was Themis) wouldn't know her. Ladeed, if I remember, Justice is worse off than mortals respecting her parentage; for while there are many people who do not know who were their fathers, poets are uncertain who was Justice's mother -some say Aurora, some say Themis. Now if I might indulge at this moment in a bit of reverie, it would not be unreasonable to suppose that it is the classic disposition of false, that is keen a second acquainted with the customs of the countwy than I | ancient country, that tends to make the operations of Justice assimilate with the uncertainty of her birth, for her dispensations they are as distinct as if they were the offspring of two different influences. One man's justice is not another man's justice; which, I suppose, must arise from the difference of opinion as to who and what Justice is. Perhaps the rich people, who incline to power, may venerate Justice more as the child it; and he went on his homeward way, with a tottering there never was a more practical burlesque upon the of Jupiter and Themis; while the unruly ones worship her as the daughter of Titan and Aurora; for undoubt-

*Fiddler's Green is supposed to be situated on this (the cooler side) of the regions below.

" Peep-o'-Day Boys,"

. a. ne ill fi rober. a'ir. oboit Justice, a few much empresement of manner: " swill not be the car awar and the room which . . . r . i st it the roun, nor was there any contribution." er i chook, to post both Lotel from the top. Now this was the Protestant electrons of the Tredition in the villerested with the parish, whose pehtical views were in (1) to be the first in the Belief the dea of hoth men prevented political feeling for the . - rescal to the control of the control of the fering, as in lighted it too often does, with it sould ... and a care and accompanies with fixed got out of the room in time, this was not the unit to manis eye, tuped bert is bed with the fore larger of In one were it is now if a Correct so that assist them in covering their houx on Fig. 1 and the derricht built of the bead and transday hereyes The march and the appet of the books and scene became excensively baierous the non-eart the with an exercise of the books and scene became excensively baierous the non-eart the with an exercise of the books and scene became the desarte pave there, on of Jerrica on the shelf, reverend gentleman made his appearance. The title vastot quie right in his or a and Law on the rack.

the imagination which sometimes gives a prisoner a passing pleasure in catching a whimsical conceit from his situation, and, in the midst of his anxiety, ancicipating the satisfaction he shall have in saying a good thing, even at the expense of his suffering. Andy only knew that he was locked up in the justice-room for something he never did. He had only sense enough to feel that he was wronged, without the spirit to wish himself righted; and he sauntered up and down the cold, miserable room, anxiously awaiting the arrival of "his honor, Squire O'Grady," to know what his fate not resist a fit of laughter on the occasion), and said might be, and wondering if they would hang him for upsetting a post-chaise in which a gentleman had been for his false imprisonment.

comfort of seeing a passing fellow-creature-for the -he's mad, poor man!-that is, a little inthane-and sight of one's kind is a comfort. He could not even thinks every lady is Mrs. Egan. An unhappy pathion, at Merryvale House," said Murphy. behold the green earth and the freshness of nature, poor fellow !- but ouite harmleth." which, though all unconsciously, has still a soothing. Furlong uttered a very prolonged "Oh!" at Fanny's influence on the uncultivated mind; he had nothing but answer to his inquiry, and looked sharply round the and there that a burnt stick in the hand of one of the conduct of every one at the moment of Mr. Berminglay is called Persian painting, "warranted to be taught In three lessons." Now, this bespeaks degeneracy in the arts; for, in the time we write of, boys and girls acquired the art without any lessons at all, and abundant proofs | thays 'Egan' to her, and thinks her his furth love." of this intuitive talent existed on the aforesaid walls, Napoleon and Wellington were fighting a duel, while Nelson stood by to see fair play, he having nothing betper to do, as the battle of Trafalgar, represented in the listance, could, of course, go on without him. The anachronism of jumbling Bonaparte, Wellington, and Nelson together, was a trifle among the O'Gradies, as they were nearly as great proficients in history, ancient and modern, as in the fine arts. Amidst these efforts of genius appeared many an old rhyme, scratched with usty nails by rustier policemen, while lounging in the justice-room during the proceedings of the great Grady, and all these were gone over again and again by Andy, till they were worn out, all but one-a rough representation of a man hauging.

this possessed a sort of fascination for poor Andy; for at last, reliaquishing all others, he same riveted before it, and muttered to himself, "I wondher can they hang me-sure it's no murdher I done-but who knows what witnesses they might get? and these times they sware mighty hard; and Squire O'Grady has such a pack o' blackguards about him, sure he could get anything swore he liked. Oh, wirra! wirra! what'll I do at all! Faix! I wouldn't like to be hanged—oh! look at him there—just the last kick in him—and a disgrace to my poor mother into the bargain. Augh!-but it's a dirty wine. leath to die-to be hung up like a dog over a gate, or an old hat on a peg, just that-a-way;" and he extended long, after he had bowed. his arm as he spoke, suspending his caubeen, while he looked with disgust at the effley. "But sure they can't hang me-though now I remember Squire Egan towld me long ago I'd be hanged some day or other. wondher does my mother know I'm tuk away-and Conah, too, the craythur, would be sorry for me. Maybe, if my mother spoke to Squire Egan, his honor would say a good word for me:-though that wouldn't do; for him and Squire O'Grady's bitther inimies now, though they wor once good friends. Och hone! sure that's the way o' the world; and a cruel world it is -so it is. Sure 'twould be well to be out of it a'most, and in a betther world. I hope there's no po'chaises in

The soliloguy of poor Andy was interrupted by a low. measured sound of thumping, which his accustomed ear at once distinguished to be the result of churning; the room in which he was confined being one of a range of offices stretching backward from the principal building and next door to the dairy. Andy had grown tired by this time of his repeated contemplation of the rhymes and sketches, his own thoughts thereon, and his long confinement; and now the monotonous sound of the churn-dash falling on his ear, acted as a sort of husho,* and the worried and wearied Andy at last laid down on the platform and fell asleep to the bumping ullaby.

heaven!"

CHAPTER XIII.

THE sportsmen, having returned from their fishing excursion to dinner, were seated round the hospitable board of Squire Egan, Murphy and Dick in high glee, at still successfully hoodwinking Furlong, and carrying Egan and O'Grady, returned to the "odd story" he had to put the piece on which he has laid his finger. on their mystification with infinite frolic.

The soup had been removed, and they were in the act of enjoying the salmon, which had already given so much enjoyment, when a loud knocking at the door announced the arrival of some fresh guest. "Did you ask any one to dinner, my dear?" inquired Mrs. Egan of her good-humored lord, who was the very day, and forget it after.

Dick?" said he.

Dick replied in the negative, and said he had better go and see who it was; for looks of alarm had been exchanged between him, the squire, and Murphy, lest any stranger should enter without being apprised of the hoax going forward; and Dawson had just reached was to be surprised now. dining-room door on his cautionary mission, when

A soft, monotonous chant the nurses sing to children do induce Heep

edly the offspring of Aurora must be most welcome to it was suddenly thrown wile open, and in walked, with a rapid step and bustling air, an active lattle gentleman Well-not to indule 1 riber in reverie-Andy, I say, dressed in black, who was at Mrs. E can's side in a a locked up in the actio room; and as I have been moment, exclaiming with a very audible voice and

"My dear Mrs. Fran, how do you do? I am dehrhted e were the first that I have another to see you. Took africal's privilere, you see, and have Prairy deline is the real. The room was a cold, come anhalden to claim the hospitally of your table. a for the capter and with a plantered wall and an The fact is, I was making a sick visit to this site of my , recentlion, size at an end, where a reised plactorm, parish; and finding it impossible to get home in time to dence of Mirgly was north anything. What he was I pogeta en le la cola autore Li homee-chair iny own damer. I had no scraple in laying yours under damb from a fold herea. Table en hara well it us cirs and a content be the tion to those of Mr. Egan; but the and training The special of the covered with intercourse of life. Still, however, if Dick Dates, Lad toward Mr. Bern, Latt. Fire covered with intercourse of life. Still, however, if Dick Dates, Lad toward Mr. Bern, Latt. Fire covered with Squire, and Murphy, opened their eyes at each where practus, s.r," sad Mr. Bernin, lacu. "But Andy thought not of these things; he had not while Mrs. Evan grew as red as scarlet when Firence seems a merical continuer." stared at her in astonishment as the new correct new tioned her name. She stammered out welcome as well as she could, and called for a chair for Mr. Berming- direct question. "Pway, Miste' O'Gwady," said he, ham, with all sorts of kind inquiries for Mrs. Berming- addressing Egan, "that is, if you are Miste' O'Gwady, ham, with all sorts of kind inquiries for Mrs. Bermingham and the little Berminghams-for the Bermingham will you tell me, are you Miste' O'Gwady?" manufactory in that line was extensive.

While the reverend gentleman was taking his seat, spreading his napkin and addressing a word to each round the table, Furlong turned to Fanny Dawson, beside whom he was sitting (and who, by-the-by, could ! horrified.

with a bewildered look-

"Did he not addwess Madame as Mistwess Egan?" riding, rather than brooding future means of redress "Yeth," said Fanny, with admirable readiness; "but you write to them to say you're safe." whithper." And as Furlong inclined his head toward There was no window to look out of; he had not the her, she whispered in his ear, "You muthn't mind him offended dignity, "I conside' myself very ill used."

joung O'Gradies emulated the art of a Sandwich ham's entrance that attracted his attention, and the sould desire for his idol; or figures after the old well- only word I can apply), roused his suspicion. Fanny's stablished school-boy manner, which in the present answer only half satisfied him; and looking at Mrs. marked "How very wed Mistwess O'Gwady gwew!"

"How vewy widiculous to be sure," said Furlong.

England?" said Fanny.

wema'kably stwange an abbewation." "Oh," returned Fanny, with quickness, "I thuppose intention to come to your house," people go mad on their ruling pathion, and the ruling pathion of the Irish, you know, is love."

The conversation all this time was going on in other quarters, and Furlong heard Mr. Bermingham talking of his having preached last Sunday in his new church.

"Suwely," said he to Fanny, "they would not pe'mit factics." A loud "Oh," said Fanny, almost suffocating with laughter, to this outbreak.

"he only thinkth he's a clergyman." "How vewy d woll you are!" said Furlong. "Now you're only quithing me," said Fanny, looking with affected innocence in the face of the unfortunate young gentleman she had been quizzing most unmercifully the whole day. "Oh, Miste' O'Gwady," said Furlong, "we saw them going to dwown a man to-day."

"Indeed!" said the Squire, reddening, as he saw Mr. Bermingham stare at his being called O'Grady; so, to cover the plot, and stop Furlong, he asked him to take 1 | wotest against-"

"Not that I know of," said the Squire.

"But are not the lowe' o'ders wather given to what other were relief to a " Lo'd Bagon calls—" "Who cares about Lord Bacon?" said Murphy

"My dear sir, you supwise me!" said Furlong, in utter amazement. "Lord Bacon's sayings-" and his sayings are very rusty by this time."

"Oh, I see, Miste' Multy. You neve' will be sewious," "Heaven forbid!" said Murphy-"at least at dinner, or after dinner. Seriousness is only a morning amuse- chapfallen, "as you can tell me how I can get to the ment-it makes a very poor figure in the evening."

"By-the-by," said Mr. Bermingham 'talking of you good-evening." drowning, I heard a very odd story to-day from

At this speech Furlong did rather open his eyes, the The soone' the bette', sir," said Furlong, retreating Spuire hummed and haved, Murphy coursed, Mr. still further into a cold and sulky manner. rigan looked into her plate, and Dick, making a desterred, a single or a double-barreled gun.

heard that morning about drowning.

was a government agent." "Why, sir," said Furlong, "that must be me!" "You, sir!" said Mr. Bermingham, whose turn it being twicked in the manner that a-" minghau

"To be su'e I'm not dwowned; but I'm the pe'son." Quite impossible, sir," said Mr. Bermingham. "You can't be the person.

"Why, sir, do you expect to pe'suade me out of my own identity!" "OL," said Murply, "there will be no occasion to prove identity till the ledy is bound, and the coroner's ibeniest sits; title to the low, ar an ierat, in Ireland." ruplor ris he vid to ! ! to at the mail returning uppur elpolitere, . I, "Alles the in the periodicul to ex planteyon, You - cost, cleyon, for the gen theman via roll from the Other via "Will, ser," and I arker, " ... " Lotte I are."

The water the character of the result of the late of t other wo killing it above it on the was turner.

"There certainly is a vewy gweat mistake somewhere," said Furlong, who was now bent on a very

"Sir," said the Squire, "you have chosen to call me O'Grady ever since you came here, but my name is "What!—the member for the county?" cried Furlong.

"Yes," said the Squire, laughing; "do you want a frank?" "Twill save your friends' postage," said Dick, "when

"Miste' Wegan," said Furlong, with an attempt at

"You're the first man I ever heard of being ill used

"Sir, it's a gwievous w'ong."

"What is all this about?" asked Mr. Bermingham. "My dear friend," said the Squire, laughing—though the walls to look at, and they were blank, save here table, for there was an indefinable something in the indeed, that was not peculiar to him, for every one round the table, save the victim, was doing the same thing (as for Fanny, she shouted)-" My dear friend. Islander, and sketched faces as grotesque as any Pagan | name "Egan," and everybody's fldgetiness (which is the this gentleman came to my house last night, and I took him for a friend of Moriarty's, whom I have been expecting for some days. He thought, it appears, this Egan, who could not conquer her confusion, he re- was Neck-or-Nothing Hall, and thus a mutual mistake has arisen. All I can say is, that you are most wel-"Oh! thee can't help bluthing, poor soul! when he come, Mr. Furlong, to the hospitality of this house as long as you please,"

"But, sir, you should not have allowed me to wemain

"Haven't you innothent mad people thumtimes in in you' house," said Furlow.

"That's a doctrine," said the Squire, "in which you "Oh, vewy," said Furlong, "but this appea's to me so will find it difficult to make an Irish host coincide." "But you must have known, sir, that it was not my

"How could I know that, sir?" said the Squire, jo cularly. "Why, Miste' Wegan-you know-that is-in factconfound it, sir!" said Furlong, at last, losing his temper, "you know I told you all about our electioneering

A loud laugh was all the response Furlong received

"Well, sir," repeated be, "I pwotest it is extremely

"You know my dear sir," said Dick, "we Irish are such poor ignorant creatures, according to your own account, that we can make no use of the knowledge with which you have so generously supplied us."

"You know," said the Squire, "we have no real

"Sir," said Furlong, growing sulky, "there is a certain finesse that is fair, and another that is unfair-and

"Pool, peed " sail Marghy " Never mind trides, "Do they often dwown people here?" continued Fur- Just went is become went better salmon to her the a tooth at to-sake

" sugrocens ter, ton would note he weamin an-

Murphy screwed his lips together, puffed ont something between a whistle and the blowing out of a candle, and ventured to suggest to Furlong he had better wait even a couple of hours, till he had got his allowance of "'Pon my conscience," said Murphy, "both himself claret. "Remember the adage, sir, 'In vino veritas,' and we'll tell you all our electioneering secrets after we've had enough wine,"

"As soon, Miste' Wegan," said Mr. Furlong, quite house to which I intended to go, I will be weddy to bid

"If you are determined, Mr. Furlong, to remain here O'Grady. You and he, I believe," said the clergyman, no longer, I shall not press my hospitality upon you. addressing Egan, "are not on as good terms as you whenever you decide upon going, my carriage shall be at your service."

The squire made no further attempt to conciliate him. rate rush to the rescue, asked Furlong which he pre- he merely said, "Dick, ring the beil. Pass the claret. Murphy.

Mr. Bermingham, perceiving the sensation his ques- The bell was rung-the claret passed-a servant en tion created, thought he had touched upon forbidden tered, and orders were given by the squire that the car ground, and therefore did not repeat his question, and riage should be at the door as soon as possible. In the Fanny whispered Furlong that one of the stranger's interim, Dick Dawson, the squire, and Murphy, laughed mad peculiarities was mistaking one person for an- as if nothing had happened, and Mrs. Egan conversed other; but all this did not satisfy Furlong, whose mis- in an undertone with Mr. Bermingham. Fanny looked givings as to the real name of his host were growing mischievous, and Furlong kept his hand on the foot of stronger every moment. At last, Mr. Bermingham, his glass, and shoved it about something in the fashion without alluding to the broken friendship between of an uncertain chess-player, who does not know where

The carriage was soon announced, and Mrs. Egan, av "Tis a strange affair," said he, "and our side of the Furlong seemed so anxious to go, rose from the table: country is all alive about it. A gentleman who was and as she retired, he made her a cold and formal bow. expected from Dublin last night at Neck-or-Nothing He attempted a tender look and soft word to Fanny-Hall, arrived, as it is ascertained, at the village, and for Furlong, who thought himself a bean garcon, had thence took a post-chaise, since which time he has not been playing off his attractions upon her all day, but been heard of; and as a post-chaise was discovered this the mischievously-merry Fanny Dawson, when she man to invite any friend he met in the course of the morning sunk in the river, close by Ballyslough caught the sheepish eye, and heard the mumbled galgutthery bridge, it is suspected the gentleman has lantry of the Castle Adonis, could not resist a titter. No, my dear," answered the squire. "Did you, been drowned either by accident or design. The postil- which obliged her to hide her dimpling cheek and lion is in confinement on suspicion, and O'Grady has pearly teeth in her handkerchief as she passed the written to the Castle about it to-day, for the gentleman door. The ladies being gone, the squire asked Furlong would he not have some more wine before he went.

"No, thank you, Miste' Wegan," replied he, "after

"Mr. Furlong," said the squire, "you have said quite "Yes, sir," said Furlong, "I took a post-chaise at the enough about that. When you came into my house village last night, and I'm an agent of the gove'ment." last night, sir, I had no intention of practicing any joke "But you're not drowned, as -and he was," said Ber- | upon you. You should have had the hospitality of an Lashman's bouse, without the consequence that has man's country, which, to your shame be it spoken, is the Castle, and the last and final order for another to keep pace with the racing-cups he won, and proudly your own. You vanished your own superior intelligence turnabout was given. Mat hardly suppressed an displayed at his drinking-bouts; and when he died sudand finesse over us, sir; and told us you came down to oath; but respect for his master stopped him. denly (broke his neck), the plate was senzed at the sum provements. Under these circumstances, sir, I think | this time, and Mat was asked a few questions got the property in a ruinous condition, it was imposwhat we have done is quite fair. We have shown you about the Hall, and at last about the Squire. Now alk of your countrymen, and attempt to undervalue happy as he could; therefore to the question of "What patched up. When the house was dilapidated, the derryvale House. Good-evening, Mr. Furlong, I hope ve part without owing each other any ill-will." The quire offered his hand, but Furlong drew up, and 'nidst such expletives as "weally," and "I must say," ne at last made use of the word "atwocious,"

"What's that you say?" said Dick. "You don't devil." speak very plain, and I'd like to be sure of the last word you used.

"I mean to say that a-" and Furlong, not much tking the tone of Dick's question, was humming and vawing a sort of explanation of what "he meant to *ay," when Dick thus interrupted him:

"I tell you this, Mr. Furlong: all that has been done is my doing-I've humbugged you, sir-humbugged. I've sold you-dead. I've pumped you, sir-all your dectioneering bag of tricks, bribery and all, exposed; and now go off to O'Grady, and tell him how the poor gnorant Irish have done you; and see, Mr. Furlong," in quiet under-tone, "if there's anything that either he or you don't like about the business, you shall have any satisfaction you like, and as often as you please."

"I shall conside" of that, sir," said Furlong, as he left the house, and entered the carriage, where he threw himself back in offended dignity, and soliloquized vows of vengeauce. But the bumping of the carriage over a rough road disturbed the pleasing reveries of revenge, to awaken him to the more probable and less tgreeable consequences likely to occur to himself for the blunder he had made: for, with all the puppy's self-sufficiency and conceit, he could not by any process of mental delusion conceal from himself the fact that he had been most tremendously done, and how his party would take it was a serious consideration. O'Grady, another horrid Irish squire—how should be face him? For a moment he thought it better to go back to Dublin, and he pulled the check-string—the carriage stopped—down went the front glass. "I say coachman."

"I'm not the coachman, sir."

"Well, whoever you are-" "I'm the groom only, sir; for the coachman was-" "Sir, I don't want to know who you are, or about your affairs; I want you to listen to me-cawn't you listen?"

"Yes, sir." "Well, then-dwive to the village."

"I thought it was to the Hall I was to dhrive, sir."

"Do what you're told, sir-the village!" "What village, sir?" asked Mat, the groom, who know well enough, but from Furlong's impertinence did not choose to understand anything gratuitously.

"Why the village I came from yeste'day." "What village was that, sir?"

"How stoopid you are!—the village the mail goes to." "Sure the mail goes to all the villages in Ireland,

"You pwovoking blockhead!-Good Heavens, how 'copid you I wish are!-the village that leads to Dub-

"Faith they all lead to Dublin, sir."

"Confound you-you must know!-the posting vili ige, you know-that is, not the post town, if you know that a post town is." "To be sure I do, sir-where they sell blankets, you

.nane." "No-no-no! I want to go to the village where they keep post-chaises-now you know."

"Faix, they have po'chayses in all the villages here; there's no betther accommodation for man or baste in the world than here, sir." Furlong was mute from downright vexation, till his age got vent in an oath, another denunciation of Irish tupidity, and at last a declaration that the driver must know the village. "How would I know it, sir, when you don't know it yourself?" asked the groom; "I suppose it has a name to it, and if you tell me that, I'll dhrive you there fast enough." "I cannot wemember your howwid names here—it is 1 Bal, or Bally, or some such gibbewish-" Mat would not be enlightened.

"Is there not Ball or Bally something?" "Oh, a power o' Ballies, sir; there's Ballygash, and Ballyslash, and Ballysmish, and Ballysmash, andwent on Mat, inventing a string of Ballies, till he was stopped by the enraged Furlong.

"None o' them! none o' them!" exclaimed he, in a fury; "'tis something about 'dirt' or 'mud.'" "Maybe 'twould be gutther, sir," said Mat, who saw Furlong was near the mark, and he thought he might as well make a virtue of telling him.

"I believe you're right," said Furlong. "Then it is Ballysloughgutthery you want to go to,

"That's the name!" said Furlong, snappishly; "dwive there!" and, hastily pulling up the glass, he threw himself back again in the carriage. Another troubled vision of what the secretary would say came across him, and, after ten minutes' balancing the question and trembling at the thoughts of an official blowing up, he thought he had better even venture on an irish squire; so the check-string was again pulled, and the glass hastily let down.

Mat halted. "Yes, sir," said Mat. "I think I've changed my mind—dwive to the Hall!" "I wish you towld me, sir, before I took the last turn

-we're nigh a mile toward the village now." "No matte', sir," said Furlong; "dwive where I tell

,'ou." Up went the glass again, and Mat turned round the horses and carriage with some difficulty in a narrow by-road.

Another vision came across the bewildered fancy of Furlong: the certainty of the fury of O'Grady-the immediate contempt as well as anger attendant on his being bamboozled-and the result at last being the same in drawing down the secretary's anger. This produced another change of intention, and he let down the glass'for the third time-once more changed his orders us concisely as possible, and pulled it up again. All this time Mat was laughing internally at the bewilder-nent of the stranger, and as he turned round the carriage again he muttered to himself, "By this and that, you're as hard to dhrive as a pig; for you'll neither go we road for th' other." He had not proceeded far, followed, had you not indulged in sneering at the Irish- when Furlong determined to face O'Grady instead of | money he could get at spent in augmenting the plate, werthrow poor Pat in the trickery of electioneering. The glass of the carriage was not pulled up of his wine-merchant; and as the heir next in succession that you are no match for us in the finesse upon which | Mat had acuteness enough to fathom the cause of Fur- | large family, so the stables and kennel went to decay, con pride yourself so much; and the next time you long's indecision, and determined to make him as un- while the ladies and family apartments could only be question, replied: "What sort of a man, sir?-Faith, he's not a man at all, sir; he's the devil."

Furlong pulled up the glass, and employed the interval between Mat's answer and reaching the Hall in making up his mind as to how he should "face the but neither hoe nor rolling-stone had, for many a year, rough road skirted by a high and ruinous wall, stopped before a gateway that had once been handsome, and Furlong was startled by the sound of a most thundering bell, which the vigorous pull of Mat stimulated to its utmost pitch; the baying of dogs which followed was terrific. A savage-looking gatekeeper made his appearance with a light-net in a lantern, but shaded with his tattered hat; many questions and answers ensued, and at last the gate was opened. The carriage proceeded up a very ragged avenue, stopped before a large rambling sort of building, which even moonlight could exhibit to be very much out of repair, and after repeated knocking at the door (for Mat knew his squire and the other squire were not friends now, and that he might be impudent), the door was unchained and unbarred, and Furlong deposited in Neck-or-Nothing Hall.

CHAPTER XIV.

"Such is the custom of Branksome Hall." -Lay of the Last Minstrel.

NECK-OR-NOTHING HALL.

CANTO I.

Ten good nights and ten good days It would take to tell thy ways, Various, many, and amazing: Neck-or-Nothing bangs all praising, Wonders great and wonders small Are found in Neck-or-Nothing Hall.

Racing rascals of ten a twain, Who care not a rush for hail nor rain,' Messages swiftly to go or to come, Or duck a taxman or harry a bum,* Or "clip a server," † did blithely lie In the stable parlor next to the sky.1 Dinners, save chance ones, seldom had they, Unless they could nibble their beds of hay; But the less they got, they were hardier all-"Twas the custom of Neck-or-Nothing Hall.

ONE lord there sat in that terrible hall; Two ladies came at his terrible call,-One his mother and one his wife, Each afraid of her separate life; THREE girls who trembled—Four boys who shook Five times a day at his lowering look; Six blunderbusses in goodly show, SEVEN horse-pistols were ranged below, Eight domestics, great and small, In idlesse did nothing but curse them all; NINE state beds, where no one slept-TEN for family use were kept; Dogs ELEVEN with burns to make free, With a bold THIRTEEN § in the treasury— (Such its numerical strength, I guess It can't be more, but it may be less.) Tar-barrels new and feathers old Are ready, I trow, for the caitiff bold

Who dares to invade The stormy shade Of the grim O'Grad In his hunting hold.

When the iron tongue of the old gate bell Doth summon the growling grooms from cell. Through cranny and crook

They peer and they look, With guns to send the intruders to heaven. But when passwords pass That might "serve a mass,"  Then bars are drawn and chains let fall. And you get into Neck-or-Nothing Hall.

CANTO II.

And never a doubt But when you are in, If you love a whole skin, I'll wager (and win) You'll be glad to get out. -Dr. Growling's Metrical Romances.

of the reader with materials to create in his own mind a vague yet not unjust notion of Neck-or-Nothing Hall; but certain details of the Hall itself, its inmates and its in of doors. customs, may be desired by the matter-of-fact reader or the more minutely curious, and as the author has the difficult task before him of trying to please all tastes, something more definite is required.

The Hall itself was, as we have said, a rambling sort of structure. Ramifying from a solid center, which additions, without any architectural pretensions to fitsity suggested or demanded, and a most incongruous mass of gables, roofs, and chimneys, odd windows and blank walls, was the consequence. According to the a queer-looking servant, with wild, scrubby hair, a circumstances of the occupants who inherited the dirty face, a tawdry livery, worse for wear, which had ed. A certain old bachelor, for example, who in the its present possessor like a coat upon a clothes-horse; course of events inherited the property, had no neces- nis cotton stockings, meant to be white, and clumsy sity for nurses, nursery-maids, and their consequent shoes meant to be black, met each other half-way and suite of apartments; and as he never aspired to the split the difference in a pleasing neutral tint. Leaving honor of matrimony, the ball-room, the drawing-room, burlong standing in the hall, he clattered up-stairs, and and extra bed-chambers were neglected; but being a a dialogue ensued between master and man so loud that fox-hunter, a new kenuel and range of stables were Furlong could hear the half of it, and his own name in built, the dining-room enlarged, and all the ready sible to keep a stud of horses along with a wife and a hem, just remember how you have been outwitted at sort of a man the squire was?" Mat, re-echoing the grounds about it, of course, were ill kept. Fine obly trees were there, originally intended to afford shade () walks which were so neglected as to be no more wallable than any other part of the grounds—the vista of aspiring stems indicated where an avenue had been," checked the growth of grass or weed. So much for The carriage, after jolting for some time over a the outside of the house; now for the inside.

Hayloft. & A shilling, so called from its being worth thirteen | better take care!—put the scoundrel under the pump!" pence in those days.

This is not the word in the MS.  Serving mass occupies about twenty-five minutes.

That had witnessed many a thoughtless, expensive. headlong and irascible master, but never one more so than the present owner; added to which, he had the misfortune of being unpopular. Other men, thoughte less, and headlong, and irritable as he, had lived and had friends; but there was something about O'Grady that was felt, perhaps, more than it could be defined, which made him unpleasing-perhaps the homely phrase "cross-grained" may best express it, and O'Grady was essentially a cross-grained man. The estate, when he got it, was pretty heavily saddled, and the "galled jade" did not "wince" the less for his riding. A good jointure to his mother was chargeable on the property, and this was an excuse on all occasions for the Squire's dilatory payment in other quarters. "Sir," he would say, "my mother's jointure is sacred-it is more than the estate can well bear, it is true, but it is a sacred claim, and I would sooner sacrifice my life, my honor, sir, than see that chain neglected!" Now all this sounded mighty fine, but his mother could never see her jointure regularly paid, and was obliged to live in the house with him; she was somewhat of an oddity, and had apartments to herself, and, as long as she was let alone, and allowed to read romances in quiet, did not complain; and whenever a stray ten-pound note did fall into her hands, she gave the greater part of it to ber younger grand-daughter, who was fond of flowers and plants, and supported a little conservatory on her grandmother's bounty, she paying the tribute of a bouquet to the old hady when the state of her botanical prosperity could afford it. The eldest girl was a favorite of an uncle, and her passion being dogs, all the presents her uncle made her in money were converted into camine curiosities; while the youngest girl took an interest in the rearing of poultry. Now the boys, varying in age from eight to fourteen, had their separate favorites too-one loved bull-dogs and terriers, another game-cocks, the third ferrets, and the fourth rubbits and pigeons. These multifarious tastes produced strange results. In the house, flowers and plants, indicating refinement of taste and costliness, were strongly contrasted with broken plaster, soiled hangings, and faded paint; an expensive dog might be seen lapping cream out of a shabby broken plate; a never-ending sequence of wars raged among the dependent favorites; the bull-dogs and terriers chopping up the ferrets, the, ferrets killing the game-cocks, the game-cocks killing the tame poultry and rabbits, and the rabbits destroying the garden, assisted by the flying reserve of pigoons. It was a sort of Irish retaliation, so annusingly exempli-

> The water began to quench the fire, The fire began to burn the stick, The stick began to beat the dog, The dog began to bite the kid.

fled in the nursery jingle—

In the midst of all these distinct and clashing tastes, that of Mrs. O'Grady (the wife) must not be forgotten; her weak point was a feather bed. Good soul! anxious that whoever slept under her roof should be softly, she would go to the furthest corner of the county to secure an accession to her favorite property—and such a collection of luxurious feather beds never was seen in company with such rickety bedsteads and tattered and mildewed curtains, in rooms uncarpeted, whose pager was dropping off the wall-well might it be called paper-hanging indeed!--whose washing-tables were of deal, and whose delf was of the plainest ware, and even that minus sundry handles and spouts. Nor was the renowned O'Grady without his hobby, too. While the various members of his family were thwarting each other, his master-mischief was thwarting them all; like some wicked want looking down on a squabble of dwarfs, and ending the fight by kicking them all right and left. Then he had his troop of pets, too-idle blackguards who were slingeing* about the place eternally, keeping up a sort of "cordon samtaire," to prevent the pestilential presence of a bailiff, which is so catching and turns to jail fever, a disease which had been fatal in the family. O'Grady never ventured beyond his domain except on the back of a fleet horse-there he felt The bird's-eye view which the doctor's peep from secure; indeed, the place he most dreaded legal as-Parnassus has afforded, may furnish the imagination sault was his own house, where he apprehended trickery might invade him: a carriage might be but a feint, and hence the great circumspection in the open-

From the nature of the establishment, thus hastily sketched, the reader will see what an ill-regulated jumble it was. The master, in difficulties, had disordery people hanging about his place for his personal security; from these very people his boys picked up the love of dog-fights, cock-fights, etc.; and they, from the gave the notion of a founder well to do in the world, fights of their pets, fought among themselves, and were always fighting with their sisters; so the reader ness, were stuck on here and there, as whim or neces- will see the "metrical romance" was not overcharged in its rhymes on Neck-or-Nothing Hall. When Furlong entered the hall, he gave his name to property, the building was either increased or neglect- manifestly been made for a larger man, and hung upon a tone of doubt, with that of "Egan," in a tone of surprise, and that of his "sable majesty" in a tone of anger, rapidly succeeded one another; then such broken words and sentences as these ensued-"fudge! -humbug!-rascally trick!-eh!-by the hokey, they'd

* An Hibernicism, expressive of lyunging laziness.

Furlong more than half suspected that it was to kim

^{*} A facetious phrase for bailiff, so often kicked. † Cutting off the ears of a process-server.

him, by this and that!"

door?"

Le first saw returned. "I fear," said Furlong, "there is some misappwehen-sion." " A what, sir?"

"A misappwehension."

"Oh, no, sir! it's only a mistake the master thought you might be making; he thinks you mistuk the bouse, maybe, siry"

"Oh, no-I wather think he mistakes me. Will you do me the favo'," and he produced a packet of papers! Furlong stared, and began a reply of "Weally, I said Mick." as he spoke-"the favo' to take my ewedentials to Mr. O'Gwady, and if he throws his eye over these pape's-"

At the word "papers," there was a shout from above, "Don't touch them, you thief, don't touch them!-another blister,-ha! ha! By the 'ternal this and that, I'll have him in the horse-pond!" A heavy stamping overhead ensued, a furious ringing of bells; in the midst of the din, a very pale lady came downstairs, and pointing the way to a small room, beckoned Furlong to follow her. For a moment he hesitated, for his heart misgave him; but shame at the thought of doubting or refusing the summons of a lady overcame his fear, and he followed to a little parlor, where mutual explanations between Mrs. O'Grady and himself, and many messages, questions, and answers, which she carried up and down stairs, at length set Furlong's mind at ease respecting his personal safety, and finally admitted him into the presence of the truculent lord of the castle—who, when he heard that Furlong had been staying in the enemy's camp, was not, it may be supposed, in a sweet temper to receive him. O'Grady looked thunder as Furfong entered, and eying him keenly for some seconds, as if he were taking a mental as well as an ocular measurement of him, he saluted him with:

"Well, sir, a pretty kettle of fish you've made of this. I hope you've not blabbed much about our affairs?" "Why, I weally don't know-I'm not sure-that is, I won't be positive, because when one is thwown off his guard, you know-" "Pooh, sir! a man should never be off his guard in an election. But how the d-l, sir, could you make such a thundering mistake as to go to the wrong house?" "It was a howwid postdlion, Miste' O'Gwady."

"The scoundrel!" exclaimed O'Grady, stamping up and down the room.

At this moment a tremendous crash was heard; the ladies jumped from their seats; O'Grady paused in his rage, and his poor, pale wife exclaimed-

"Tis in the conservatory." A universal rush was now made to the spot, and there was Handy Andy, buried in the ruins of flower-pots and exotics, directly under an enormous breach in the glass roof of the building. How this occurred a few words will explain. Andy, when he went to sleep in the justice-room, slept soundly for some hours, but he could, and to this end piled the chair upon the desk, there?" and the volumes of law books on the chair, and, being an active fellow, contrived to scramble up high enough to lay his hand on the frame of the sky-light, and thus make his way out on the roof. Then walking, as well as the darkness would permit him, along on Furlong; "Murphy? the coping of the wall, he approached, as it chanced, the conservatory; but the coping being loose, one of the flags turned under Andy's foot, and bang he went crushed geraniums and hydrangeas.

curses from O'Grady; but the moment Andy recovered for the election;" and, with a disdainful jerk, he threw the few senses he had, and saw Furlong, regardless of the spoon into the fire, after which he threw himself the anathemas of the Equire, he shouted out, "There he is!-there he is!" and rushing toward him, exclaimed, "Now, did I dhrowned you, sir-did 1? Sure, very low whistle indeed. One of the girls stole softly

I never murchered you!" Furlong's presence made him no longer liable to im- alone?—there's coal enough on it; the devil burn 'em prisonment.

"Maybe he has a vote," said Furlong, anxious to display how much he was on the qui vire in election matt rs. "Have you a vote, you rascal?" "You may s'arch me if you like, your honor," said Andy, who thought a vote was some sort of property

he was suspected of stealing. "You are either the biggest rogue or the biggest fool I ever met," said O'Grady. "Which are you now?" "Whichever your honor plazes," said Andy.

"If I forgive you, will you stand by me at the election?" "I'll stand anywhere your honor bids me," said Andy, bumbly. "That's a thorough-going rogue, I'm inclined to a wicked grin. think," said O'Grady, aside to Furlong.

"He looks more like a fool in my appwehension," was the reply. "Oh, these fellows conceal the deepest roguery sometimes under an assumed simplicity. You don't understand the Irish." "Unde'stand!" exclaimed Furlong; "I pwonounce the the d-l were you salmon-fishing?" whole countwy quite incompwhensible!"

"Well!" growled O'Grady to Andy, after a moment's consideration, "go down to the kitchen, you housebreaking vagabond, and get your supper!"

uncomfortable; he sharpened his ears to their keenest O'Grady, the reader may be surprised at the easy man- 'O'Grady, casting a look of mingled rage and contempt hearing, but there was a bull in the conversation, and ner in which Andy slipped through his fingers, after on the fisherman, merely uttered the ejaculation, "Oh, he could ascertain one of the gentler sex was engaged having slipped through the roof of his conservatory; Moses!" and threw himself back in his chair; but startin it by the ogre-like voice uttering, "Fudge, woman! but as between two stools folks fall to the ground, so | ing up a moment after, he rung the bell violently. -ilddle-de-dee!" Then he caught the word, "perhaps," between two rages people sometimes tumble into safety. "What do you want, my dear?" said his poor wife, venand "gentleman," in a lady's voice; then out thunder- | O'Grady was in a divided passion-first his wrath was turing to lift her eyes, and speaking in the humblest ed, "that rascat's carriage!-why come in that?- excited against Furlong for his blunder, and just as that tone-"what do you want?" friend!-humbug!-raseal's carriage!-tar and feather was about to explode, the crash of Andy's sudden ap- "Some broiled bones!" said O'Grady, very much like pearance amidst the flower-pots (like a practical parody | an ogre; "I want something to settle my stomach after Furlong began to feel very uncomfortable; the con- on "Love among the roses") called oil the gathering what I've heard, for, by the powers of ipecacuanha, 'tis versation ended; down came the servant, to whom Fur- storm in a new direction, and the fury sufficient to an- enough to make a horse sick-sick, by the powers !long was about to address himself, when the man said, nihilate one, was, by dispersion, harmless to two. But on shivering all over like a dog in a wet sack. I must have "He would be with him in a minit," and vanished; a the return of the party from the conservatory, after | broiled bones and hot punch!" sort of reconnoitering party, one by one, then passed | Andy's descent to the kitchen, O'Grady's rage against | The servant entered, and O'Grady swore at him for through the hall, eying the stranger very suspiciously, Furlong, though moderated, had settled down into a not coming sooner, though he was really expeditious any of them, to whom Furlong ventured a word, very substantial dissatisfaction, which he evinced by in his answer to the bell. scurrying off in double-quick time. For an instant he poking his nose between his forefinger and thumb, as if meditated a retreat, and, looking to the door, saw a he meditated the abstraction of that salient feature heavy chain across it, the pattern of which must have from his face, shuffling his feet about, throwing his been had from Newgate. He attempted to unfasten it, right leg over his left knee, and then suddenly, as if and as it clanked heavily, the ogre's voice from up- that were a mistake, throwing his left over the right, stairs bellowed: "Who the d-I's that opening the thrumming on the arm of his chair with his clenched hand, inhaling the air very audibly through his pro-Furlong's hand dropped from the chain, and a low truded lips, as if he were supping hot soup, and all the growling went on up the staircase. The servant whom time fixing his eyes on the fire with a portentous gaze, as if he would have evoked from it a salamander.

Mrs. O'Grady in such a state of affairs, wishing to speak to the stranger, yet anxious she should say mind, make haste!" nothing that could bear upon immediate circumstances lest she might rouse her awful lord and master, racked | room with celerity, and thanking Heaven when he had her invention for what she should say; and at last, with "bated breath" and a very worn-out smile, fal- he got to the kitchen, he told the cook to make haste, tered forth:

"Pray, Mr. Furlong, are you fond of shuttlecock?" caunt say that-"

When O'Grady gruffly broke in with, "You'd better across the kitchen for the gridiron.

ask him, does he love teetotum." "I thought you could recommend me the best establishment in the metropolis, Mr. Furlong, for buying shuttlecocks," continued the lady, unmindful of the interruption.

"You had better ask him where you can get mousetraps," growled O'Grady.

Mrs. O'Grady was silent, and O'Grady, whose rage had now assumed its absurd form of tagging changes, continued, increasing his growl, like a crescendo on the double-bass, as he proceeded: "You'd better ask, I think-mouse-traps-steel-traps-clap-traps-rat-traps -rattle-traps-rattle-snakes!"

Furlong stared, Mrs. O'Grady was silent, and the Misses O'Grady cast fearful sidelong glances at "Pa," whose strange irritation always bespoke his not being in what good people call a "sweet state of mind;" he laid hold of a tea-spoon, and began beating a tattoo on ates br'iled bones." the mantel-piece to a low smothered whistle of some very obscure tune, which was suddenly stopped to say to Furlong, very abruptly:

"So Egan diddled you?" "Why, he certainly, as I conceive, pwacticed, or I might say, in short-he-a-in fact-"

"Oh, yes," said O'Crady, cutting short Furlong's a hot dish. humming and hawing; "oh, yes, I know-diddled you." Bang went the spoon again, keeping time with another string of nonsense. "Diddled you-diddle, diddle, the cat and the fiddle, the cow jumped over the moon-who was there ?" "A Mr. Dawson." "Phew!" ejaculated O'Grady with a doleful whistle; "Dick the Devil! You are in nice hands! All up with us-up with ust p, up, up, And here we go down, down, down, derry down! Oh, murther!" and the spoon went faster than before!

"Anything else?" "Mister Bermingham." "Bermingham!" exclaimed O'Grady.

"A cle'gyman, I tlank," drawled Furlong, " Berning nam" resterated O'Grady, "What becomes the vision, that he determined on making his escape if Wolverhampton-murther! Any one else? Was Durfy

"No," said Furlong; "but there was an old pe'son, whose name wymes to his-as you seem fond of wymes, Mister O'Gwady." "What!" said O'Grady, quickly, and fixing his eyes

"Yes. Miste' Muffy."

O'Grady gave a more doleful whistle than before through the glass roof, carrying down in his fall some again, "Murphy!—then I'll tell you what it is; do you score of flower-pots, and finally stuck in a tub, with his see that?" and he held up the spoon before Furlong, legs upward, and embowered in the branches of who, being asked the same question several times, conrushed geraniums and hydrangeas.

fessed he did see the spoon. "Then I'll tell you what He was dragged out of the tub, amidst a shower of it is," said O'Grady again, "I wouldn't give you that a bit of supper there, in which Andy was to join, he back in his chair with an appearance of repose, while he glanced fiercely up at the ceiling, and indulged in a round to the fire and gently took up the tongs to reall-Egan, Murphy, and all o' them! What do you stand there for, with the tongs in your hands, like a lime-kiln; go out o' that.

continued his gaze on the ceiling and his whistle; and ished, after sitting in silence for some time, thought a wish to retire. Mrs. O'Grady gently suggested it was yet early; which Furlong acknowledged, but pleaded his extreme fatigue after a day of great exertion.

"I suppose you were canvassing," said O'Grady, with

"Ce'tainly not: they could sca'cely pwesume on such a thing as that, I should think, in my pwesence." "Then what fatigued you!-eh?"

"Salmon-uslang, sir," "Whati' exclaimed O'Grady, opening his fierce eyes, and turning suddenly round. "Salmon-fishing! Where

"In the wiver, close by here." vehement assurance in answer to their looks of worder, that he had taken some very fine calmon indeed.

this delicate attention was intended, and began to feel Now, considering the "fee, faw, fum" qualities of The girls could not suppress their laughter; and

"Confound your lazy bones; you're never in time." "'Deed, sir; I came the minit I heerd the bell." "Hold your tongue!-who bid you talk? The devil tly away with you!-and you'll never go fast till be does. Make haste now-go to the cook-"

"Yes, sir," "Curse you! can't you wait till you get your message? Go to the devil with you!—get some broiled bones-hot water and tumblers-don't forget the whisky-and pepper them well. Mind, hot-everything hot-screeching hot. Be off, now, and make haste-

"Yes, sir," said the servant, whipping out of the the door between him and his savage master. When if ever she made haste in her life, "for there's owld Danger up stairs in the divil's temper, God bless us!"

"Faix, he's always that," said the cook, scurrying

"Oh! but he's beyant all to-night," said Mick; "I think he'll murther that chap up stairs before he stops," "Oh, wirra!" cried the cook; "there's the fire not bright, bad luck to it, and he wantin' a brile!"

"Bright or not bright," said Mick, "make haste I'd advise you, or he'll have your life." The bell rung violently.

"There, do you hear him tattherin'?" said Mick, rushing up stairs.

"I thought it was tay they wor takin'," said Larry Hogan, who was sitting in the chimney-corner, smok-"So they are," said the cook.

"Then I suppose, broiled bones is geneetl."

"Oh, no; it's not for tay, at all, they want them; it's only ould Danger himself. Whenever he's in a rage, he "Faith, they are a brave cure for anger," said Larry;

"I wouldn't be angry myself, if I had one." Down rushed Mick, to hurry the cook-bang, twang! went the bell as he spoke. "Oh, listen to him!" said Mick: "for the tendher mercy o' Heaven, make haste!" The cook transferred the bones from the gridiron to

"Oh, murther, but they're smoked!" said Mick. "No matther," said the cook, shaking her red elbow furiously; "I'll smother the smoke with the pepperthere!-give them a good dab o' musthard now, and sarve them hot!"

Away rushed Mick, as the bell was rattled into fits

While the cook had been broiling bones for O'Grady below, he had been grilling Furlong for himself above. In one of the pauses of the storm, the victim ventured to suggest to his termenter that all the mischief that had arisen might have been avoided, if O'Grady had met him at the village, as he requested of him in one of his letters. O'Grady denied all knowledge of such a request, and after some queries about certain portions of the letter, it became manifest it had miscarried.

"There!" said O'Grady; "there's a second letter her be there, and be !" O'Grady swallowed a curse astray; I'm certain they put my letters astray on purwhen he remembered he was a clergunan. "The pose. There's a plot in the post-office against me; by awoke in the horrors of a dream, in which he fancied over y's carry rot has principles' (), Ferminal and that, I'll have an inquiry. I wish all the post he was about to be hanged. So impressed was he by, Bermingham - Brimmagem, Brummagem, She theld, offices in the world were blown up; and all the postmasters hanged, postmaster-general and all-I do-by the 'ternal war, I do-and all the mail coaches in the world ground to powder, and the roads they go on into the bargain-devil a use in them but to carry bad news over the universe-for all the letters with any good in them are lost; and if there's a money inclosure in one, that's sure to be robbed. Blow the post-office, I sayblow it, and sink it!"

> It was at this moment Mick entered with the broiled and banging the spoon faster than ever, exclaimed bones, and while he was in the room, placing glasses on the table, and making the necessary arrangements for making "screeching hot punch," he heard O'Grady and Furlong talking about the two lost letters.

having just completed some applications of brown paper and vinegar to the bruises received in his fall. Larry Hogan, too, was invited to share in the repast; and it was not the first time, by many, that Larry quartered on the squire. Indeed, many a good larder was opened to Larry Hogan; he held a very deep in-Twas as much as could be done to keep O'Grady's cover the spoon; it made a slight rattle, and her father terest in the regards of all the female domestics over hands off Andy, for smashing the conservatory, when turned smartly round, and said, "Can't you let the fire the country, not on the strength of his personal charms, for Larry had a hanging lip, a snub nose, a low forehead, a large ugly head, whose scrubby, grizzled hair grew round the crown in the form of a priest's tonsure. hairdresser, or a stuck pig? I tell you, I'm as hot as a Not on the strength of his gallantry, for Larry was always talking morality and making sage reflections, The daughter retired, and the spoon was left to its while he supplied the womankind with bits of lace, rolls fate; the ladies did not dare to utter a word; O'Grady of ribbon, and now and then silk stockings. He always had some plausible story of how they happened to Furlong, very uncomfortable and much more aston- come in his way; for Larry was not a regular peddler; carrying no box, he drew his chance treasures from retreat the best move he could make, and intimated his the recesses of very deep pockets contrived in various parts of his attire. No one asked Larry how he came by such a continued supply of natty articles, and if they had, Larry would not have told them; for he was a very "close" man, as well as a "civil-spoken," under which character he was first introduced to the reader on the memorable night of Andy's destructive adventure in his mother's cabin. Larry Hogan was about as shrewd a fellow as any in the whole country, and while no one could exactly make out what he was, or how he made the two ends of his year meet, he knew nearly as much of every one's affairs as they did themselves; in the phrase of the country, he was "as 'cute as a for, as close as wax, and as deep as a draw-well."

The supper-party sat down in the kitchen, and be-The ladies now all stared; but Furlong advanced a tween every three mouthfuls poor Mick could get, he was obliged to canter up-stairs at the call of the flercely rang bell. Ever and anon, as he returned, be bolted his times the reverse, on the hard fate of attending such a "born devil," as he called the squire.

"Why he's worse nor ever to-night," says the cook. "What ails him at all—what is it all about?"

"Oh, he's blackguardin' and blastin' away about hat quare, slink-lookin' chap, up-stairs, goin' to Squire Egan's instead of comin' here,'

"That was a bit o' your handy work," said Larry, with a grim smile at Andy, "And then," said Mick, "he's swearin' by all the murthers in the world agen the whole countliny, about ome letthers was stole out of the post-office by someoody," Andy's hand was in the act of raising a mouthful to nis lips, when these words were uttered; his hand fell, and his mouth remained open. Larry Hogan had his ye on him at the moment. "He swares he'll have some one in the body o' the jail," said Mick; "and he'll never stop till he sees them

Andy thought of the effigy on the wall, and his dream, and grew pale. "By the hokey," said Mick, "I never see him in sitch a tattherin' rage!"-bang went the bell again-"Ow, ow!" cried Mick, bolting a piece of fat bacon, wiping his mouth on the sleeve of his livery, and running upstairs.

"Misses Cook, ma'am," said Andy, shoving back his chair from the table; "thank you, ma'am, for your good supper. I think I'll be goin' now."

"Sure, you're not done yet, man alive." "Enough is as good as a feast, ma'am," replied Andy.

"Augh! sure the morsel you took is more like a fast than a feast," said the cook, "and it's not Lent." "It's not lent, sure enough," said Larry Hogan, with a sly griu; "it's not lent, for you gare it to him." "Ah, Misther Hogan, you're always goin' on with your conundherums," said the cook; "sure, that's not the lent I mane at all—I mane Good Friday Lent."

"Faix, every Friday is good Friday that a man gets his supper," said Larry.

"Well, you will be goin' on, Misther Hogan," said the cook. "Oh, but you're a witty man; but I'd rather have a yard of your lace, any day, than a mile o' your · liscollest,

"Sure, you ought not to mind my goin' on, when you're lettin' another man go off, that-a-way," said Larry, pointing to Andy, who, hat in hand, was quitting the kitchen.

"Faix an' he mustn't go," said the cook; "there's two words to that bargain;" and she closed the door, and put her back against it.

"My mother's expectin' me, ma'am," said Andy. "Throth, if't was your wife was expectin' you, she must wait a bit," said the cook; "sure you wouldn't leave the thirsty curse on my kitchen?-you must take a dhrop before you go; besides the dogs outside the place would ate you onless there was some one they knew along wid you; and sure, if a dog bit you, you couldn' dhrink wather afther, let alone a dhrop o' beer, or a thrifle o' sper'ts: isn't that thrue, Misther Hogan?"

"Indeed an' it is, ma'am," answered Larry; "no one can dhrink afther a dog bites them, and that's the 'ayson that the larn'd fackleties calls the disaise high-1hry--11

"High-dhry what?" asked the cook.

"That's what I'm thinkin' of," said Larry. "Highdhry-high-dhry-something."

"There's high-dhry snuff," said the cook.

"Oh, no-no, no, ma'am!" said Larry, waving his hand and shaking his head, as if unwilling to be interrupted in endeavoring to recall "Some fleeting remembrance;"

"high-dhry-po-po-something about po; faith, it's not unlike popery," said Larry.

"Don't say popery," cried the cook; "it's a dirty word! Say Roman Catholic when you spake of the faith," makes us love our neighbor as ourselves?"

than yourself, particularly about dinner-time-" cook interrupt his outpouring of pious eloquence-"what makes us fierce in prosperity to our friends, and meek in adversity to our inlinies?" "Oh! Misther Hogan!" said the cook, blessing herself. throuble? why, your faith: what makes you below desait, and above reproach, and on neither side of ister, and there was no opposition. "Oh, Missis Mulligan, do you think I would desaive or bethray my fellow-crayture? Oh, no-I would not wrong the child unborn,"-and this favorite phrase of Larry (and other rascals) was, and is, unconsciously, true; for people, most generally, must be born before they can be much wronged. "Oh, Missis Mulligan," said Larry, with a devotional appeal of his eyes to the ceiling, "be at war with sin, and you'll be at paice with yourself!" shoved in the door, against which the cook supported herself, and told Andy the Squire said he should not eave the hall that night.

Andy looked aghast. Again Larry Hogan's eye was on him.

"Sure I can come back here in the mornin'," said Andy, who at the moment he spoke was conscious of the intention of being some forty miles out of the place refore dawn, if he could get away.

"When the Squire says a thing, it must be done," aid Mick. "You must sleep here."

"And pleasant dhrames to you," said Larry, who naw Andy wince under his kindly-worded stab. "And where must I sleep?" asked Andy, dolefully.

"Out in the big loft," said Mick. "I'll show you the way," said Larry; "I'm goin' to sleep there myself to-night, for it would be too far to go home. Good-night, Mrs. Mulligan-good-night, Mickey-come along, Andy." moon shed a steady though not a bright light on the the prominent nose of her father, and something of his had better wait till the boys had done their Latin leainclosure. Hogan cast a lynx eye around him to see if upper lip too, beard included; and these, unfortuthe coast was clear, and satisfying himself it was, he nately, were all she was ever likely to inherit from him;

allowance with an ejaculation, sometimes pious, some reached the middle of the yard, and setting Andy's moderated degree. Altogether, he thought the girls low, mysterious whisper-low, as if he feared the duties had expelled him from a paradise to send him night breeze might betray it—and the words were few but potent which he uttered; they were these: " Who robbed the post-office?"

Soon after breakfast at Merryvale the following have themselves, he'd turn them all out, morning, Mrs. Egan wanted to see the Squire. She went to his sitting-room-it was bolted. He told her, from the inside, he was engaged just then, but would see her by-and-by. She retired to the drawing-room, where Fanny was singing. "Oh, Fanny," said her sister, "sing me that dear new song of 'The Voices,' 'tis so sweet, and must be felt by those who, like me, have a happy home."

Fanny struck a few notes of a wild and peculiar symphony, and sung her sister's favorite.

THE VOICE WITHIN.

You ask me the dearest place on earth. Those simple joys can never die; Tis the holy pale of the happy hearth, Where love does light each beaming eye. With snowy shroud Let tempests loud Around my old tower raise their din; What boots the shout Of storms without,

While voices sweet resound within? Oh, dearer sound For the tempests round, The voices sweet within!

I ask not wealth, I ask not power; But gracious Heaven, oh, grant to me That when the storms of Fate may lower, My heart just like my home may be! When in the gale Poor Hope's white sail No haven can for shelter win, Fate's darkest skies The heart defies Whose still small voice is sweet within. Oh, heavenly sound,

'Mid the tempests round, That voice so sweet within! Egan had entered as Fanny was singing the second did not remark. "Is not that a sweet song, Edward?" said she. "No one ought to like it more than you, for your home is your happiness, and no one has a clearer conscience." Egan kissed her gently, and thanked her for her good opinion, and asked her what she wished to say to him. They left the room.

marred her music; leaving the piano, and walking to the window, she saw Larry Hogan walking from the house down the avenue.

CHAPTER XV.

If the morning brought uneasiness and distrust to Merryvale, it dawned not more brightly on Neck-or-Nothing Hall. The discord of the former night was not preparatory to harmony on the morrow, and the parties separating in ill-humor from the drawing-room were not likely to look forward with much pleasure to the breakfast-"Do you think I would undhervalue the faith?" said | parlor. But before breakfast sleep was to intervene-Larry, casting up his eyes. "Oh, Missis Mulligan, you that is, for those who could get it—and the unfortunate know little of me; d'you thing I would undhervalue Furlong was not among the number. Despite the what is my hope, past, present, and to come?-what very best feather-bed Mrs. O'Grady had selected for makes our hearts light when our lot is heavy?-what him from among her treasures, it was long before slumber weighed down his feverish eyelids; and even "Indeed, Misther Hogan," broke in the cook, "I then, it was only to have them opened again in some never knew any one fonder of calling in on a neighbor convulsive start of a troubled dream. All his adventures of the last four-and-twenty hours were jumbled "What makes us," said Larry, who would not let the together in strange confusion-now on a lonely road, while dreading the assaults of robbers, his course was course, and under her guidance went through many interrupted not by a highwayman, but a river, whereou apartment those on the basement story were hurried embarking, he began to catch salmon in a most sur- through rapidly, but when Mrs. O'Grady got him upprisingly rapid manner, but just as he was about to stairs, among the bed-rooms, she dweit on the excelhaul in his fish it escaped from the hook, and the sal- lence of every apartment. "This I need not show you, "What puts the leg undher you when you are in mon, making wry faces at him, very impertinently ex- Mr. Furlong-'tis your own; I hope you slept well last claimed, "Sure, you wouldn't catch a poor, ignorant, night?" This was the twentieth time the question had Irish salmon?" He then snapped his pistols at the been asked. "Now, here is another, Mr. Furlong; the nothin'?" Larry slapped the table like a prime min- insolent fish-then his carriage breaks down, and he is window looks out on the lawn: so nice to look out on suddenly transferred from the river to the road; thieves the lawn, I think, in the morning, when one gets up!seize upon him and bind his hands, but a charming so refreshing and wholesome! Oh! you are looking at young lady with pearly teeth frees him from his bonds, the stain in the ceiling, but we couldn't get the roof reand conducts him to a castle where a party is engaged | lained in time before the winter set in last year; and in playing cards; he is invited to join, and as his cards Nr. O'Grady thought we might as well have the paintare dealt to him he anticipates triumph in the game, ers and slaters together in the summer-and the house but by some malicious fortune his trumps are trans- does want paint, indeed, but we all hate the smell of formed into things of no value as they touch the board; paint. See here, Mr. Furlong," and she turned up a he loses his money, and is kicked out when his purse has been emptied, and he escapes along a dark road pur-Just as Larry wound up his pious peroration, Mick sued by his spoilers, who would take his life, and a horrid cry of "broiled bones" rings in his ears as he flies: he is seized and thrown into a river, where, as he sinks, shoals of salmon raise a chorus of rejoicing, and he wakes out of the agonies of dream-drowning to find himself nearly suffocated by sinking into the feathery depths of Mrs. O'Grady's pet bed. After a night passed in such troubled visions the unfortunate Furlong awoke unrefreshed, and, with bitter recollections of the past and mournful anticipations of the future. arose and prepared to descend to the parlor, where a I always show my beds, Mr. Furlong. Now, here's anservant told him breakfast was ready.

guishes the house of an Irish squire; for though O'Grady was not so savage as on the preceding evening. able when the master's temper blew from a stormy taid his hand impressively on Andy's arm, as they and Charlotte, the younger, had the same traits in a face right against the moonlight, so that he might the plainest he had ever seen, and the house more horwatch the slightest expression, he paused for a mo- rible than anything that was ever imagined; and he ment before he spoke; and when he spoke, it was in a sighed a faint fashionable sigh, to think his political

"The other way-the other way!"

Four boys and a little girl sat at a side-table, where a The result quite satisfied Hogan, and he knew how to capacious jug of milk, large bowls, and a lusty loaf turn his knowledge to account. O'Grady and Egan were laid under contribution amidst a suppressed but were no longer friends; a political contest was pend- continuous wrangle, which was going forward among ing; letters were missing; Andy had been Egan's serv- the juniors; and a snappish "I will" or "I won't," a ant; and Larry Hogan had enough of that mental "Let me alone" or a "Behave yourself," occasionally chemical power, which, from a few raw facts, unim- was distinguishable above the murmur of dissatisfacportant separately, could make a combination of great tion. A little squall from the little girl at last made O'Grady turn round and swear that, if they did not be-

"It is all Goggy, sir," said the girl. "No, it's not, you dirty little thing," cried George, whose name was thus cuphoniously abbreviated. "He's putting-" said the girl, with excitement.

"Ah, you dirty little-" interrupted Goggy, in a low contemptuous tone.

"He's putting, sir-" "Whisht! you young devils, will you?" cried O'Grady, and a momentary silence prevailed; but the little girl sniveled and put up her bib* to wipe her eyes, while Goggy put out his torgue at her. Many minutes had not elapsed when the girl again whimpered-

"Call to Goggy, papa; he's putting some mouse's tails into my malk, sir."

"Ah, you dirty little tell-tale!" cried Goggy, reproachfully; "a tell-tale is worse than a mouse's tail." O'Grady jumped up, gave Master Goggy a box on the ear, and then caught him by the aforesaid appendage to hus head, and as he led him to the door by the same, Goggy bellowed lustily, and when ejected from the room howled down the passage more like a dog than a human being. O'Grady, on resuming his seat, told Polsheet (the little girl) she was always getting Goggy a beating, and she was a little cantankerous cat and a dirty tell-tale, as Goggy said. Among the ladies and Furlong the breakfast went forward with coldness and constraint, and all were glad when it was nearly over. At this period, Mrs. O'Grady half filled a large bowl from the tea-urn, and then added to it some weak tea, and Miss O'Grady collected all the broken bread about the table on a plate. Just then Furlong ventured to "twouble" Mrs. O'Grady for a leetle more tea, and bofore he handed her his cup he would have emptied the sediment in the slop-basin, but by mistake he popped it into the large bowl of miserable Mrs. O'Grady had prepared. Furloug begged a thousand pardons, but

Mrs. O'Grady assured him it was of no consequence, as it was only for the tutor! O'Grady, having swallowed his breakfast as fast as possible, left the room; the whole party soon tollowed, and on arriving in the drawing-room, the young ladies became more agreeable when no longer under the constraint of their ogre father. Eurlong talked slip-slop verse; he wore a troubled air, which his wife at first commonplaces with them; they spoke of the country and the weather, and he of the city; they assured him that the dews were heavy in the evening, and that the grass was so green in that part of the country; he obliged them with the interesting information, that the Liffy ran through Dublin, but that the two sides of the city communicated by means of bridges-that the houses were built of red brick generally, and that the Fanny remarked Egan's unusually troubled air, and it hail-doors were painted in imitation of mahogany; to which the young ladies responded, "Law, how odd!" and added, that in the country people mostly painted their hall-doors green, to match the grass. Furloug admitted the propriety of the proceeding, and said he liked uniformity. The young ladies quite coincided in his opinion, declared they all were so fond of uniformity, and added that one of their carriage horses was bland. Furlong admitted the excellence of the observation, and said, in a very soft voice, that Love was > "Exactly," said Miss O'Grady, "and that's the reason we call our horse 'Cupid'!"

"How elever!" replied Furlong.

blind also,

"And the mare that goes in harness with him-she's an ugly creature, to be sure, but we call her 'Venus.'" "How dwoll!" said Furlong.

"That's for uniformity," said Miss O'Grady.

"How good!" was the rejoinder. Mrs. O'Grady, who had left the room for a few minutes, now returned and told Furlong she would show him over the house if he pleased. He assented, of milt as she spoke; "just put your hand into that bed; did you ever feel a finer bed?"

Furlong declared he never did. "Oh, you don't know how to feel a bed!-put your hand into it-well, that way;" and Mrs. O'Grady plunged her arm up to the ellow imo the object of her admiration. Furlong poked the bed, and was all lauda

"Isn't it beautiful?" "Cha'ming!" replied Furlong, trying to pick off the bits of down which ching to his coat.

"Oh, never mind the down-you shall be brushed off; other: and so she went on, dragging poor Furlong up His morning greeting by the family was not of that and down the house, and he did not get out of her hearty and cheerful character which generally distin- clutches till he had poked all the beds in the establishment. As soon as that ceremony was over, and that his coat had undergone the process of brushing, he he was rather gruff, and the ladies dreaded being agree- wished to take a stroll, and was going forth, when Mrs. O'Grady interrupted him, with the assurance that it point. Furlong could not heip regretting at this mo- would not be safe unless some one of the family became ment the lively breakfast-table at Merryvale, nor avoid his escort, for the dogs were very flerce-Mr. O'Grady Andy followed Hogan. They had to cross a yard to contrasting to disadvantage the two Miss O'Gradys was so fond of dogs, and so proud of a particular breed reach the stables; the night was clear, and the waning with Fanny Dawson. Augusta, the eldest, inherited of dogs he had, so remarkable for their courage-sons. So Furlong was marched back to the drawingroom.

^{*} Pinafore: + Mary.

message from her grandmamma, who wished to have the place for the world! But they have left the anthem, the pleasure of making his acquaintance, and hoped he. Thope?" would pay her a visit. Furlong, of course, was "quite | thereupon, led him to the old lady's apartment.

'a gentleman from Dublin Castle" was in the house; anthem to be postponed till afte the se'mon." the desired to see him. To see any one from the seat "Oh, yes," said the old lady, "I remember, now, thout the sentinels at the gate, the entrance-porch, loft?" and if the long range of windows yet glittered with lights on St. Patrick's night; but to have a conversacion with an official from that seat of government and courtly pleasure was, indeed, something to make her them all the time the service went on-they were so roпарру.

On Furlong being introduced, the old lady received tim very courteously, at the same time with a certain cold in the winter." vir flat betokened she was accustomed to deference. Her communding farure was habited in a loose morn- it's quite funny, when your teeth are chattering with ing wrapper, made of gray flamnel; but while this gave cold, to hear Spray singing, 'Comfort ye, my people;' evidence she studied her personal comfort rather than | but, to be sure, that is almost enough to warm you. appearance, a bit of pretty silk handkerchief about the You are fond of music, I perceive?" neck, very knowingly displayed, and a becoming ribbon at her cap showed she did not quite neglect her good tooks; it did not require a very quick eye to see, be- called by the poets). I sometimes sing, too. Lo you Fogy?" dies, a small touch of rouge on the cheek which age | know 'The lass with the delicate air?' a sweet ballad of had depressed, and the assistance of Indian ink to the the old school-my instrument once belonged to Dolly evebrow which time had thinned and faded. A glass Bland, the celebrated Mrs. Jordan now-ah, there, sir, tilied with flowers stood on the table before her, and a is a brilliant specimen of Irish mirthfulness-what a quantity of books lay scattered about; a gustur-not cereature she isf. Hand me my lute, child," she said to in' sarve you but brakin' the weather-cock?" the Spanish instrument now in fashion, but the English | her granddaughter; and having adjusted the blue ribone of some eighty years ago, strong with wire and bon over her shoulder, and twisted the tuning-pegs, tuned in thirds-hung by a blue ribbon beside her; a and thrummed upon the wires for some time, she made corner cupionard, fantastically carved, here some cu- a prelude and cleared her throat to sing "The lass with tious specimens of china on one side of the room; the delicate air," when the loud whirring of the clockwhite, in strange discord with what was really scarce | wheels interrupted her, and she looked up with great and beautiful, the commonest Dutch cuckoo-clock was | delight at a little door in the top of the clock, which suspended on the opposite wall; close beside her chair | suddenly sprung open, and out popped a wooden bird. stood a very pretty little Japan table, bearing a looking-glass with numerous drawers framed in the same material; and while Furlong seated himself, the old the bird popped in again, the little door closed, and the lady, cast a sidelong glance at the mirror, and her monotonous tick of the clock continued. withered ingers played with the fresh ribbon. ve recently arrived from the Castle, sir, I

"Quite wecently, madam—awived last night." honor of his acquaintance, but I love the Lord Lieuten- | warbler up there, I dare not venture; but I will sing it and the aides de-camps are so nice, and the little for you to-morrow. Good morning, sir. I am happy pages!-put a marker in that book,' said she, in an to have had the honor of making your acquaintance. undertone, to her granddaughter, "page seventy-four She bowed Furlong out very politely, and as her grand- . "Hold your prate, you old thief!-why wouldn't wo -ah," she resumed in a bigher tone, "that reminds me daughter was following, she said, "My love, you must of the Honorable Captain Wriggle, who commanded a not forget some seeds for my little bird." Furlong seventy-four, and danced with me at the Castle the looked rather surprised, for he saw no bird but the one evening Lady Legge sprained her ankle. By-the-by, in the clock; the young lady marked his expression, are there any seventy-fours in Dublin now?"

deciently deep for line-of-battle ships."

"Oh dear, yes! I have seen quantities of seventy- Eurlong was now handed over to the boys, to show lours there; though, indeed, I am not quite sure if it him over the domain; and they, young imps as they wasn't at Spiliceul. Give me the smelling salts, Char- were, knowing he was in no favor with their father, felt iotte, love; mine does ache indeed! How subject the they might treat him as ill as they pleased, and quiz dear Duchess of Rutland was to headaches; you did | him with impunity. The first portion of Furlong's pennot know the Duchess of Rutland?-no, to be sure, ance consisted in being dragged through dirty stables. what am I thinking of? you're too young; but those yards and out-houses, and shown the various pets of were the charming days! You have heard, of course, all the parties; dogs, pigeons, rabbits, weasels, etc., the duchess' bon wol in reply to the compliment of Lord were paraded, and their qualities expatiated upon, was some scandal about them; but the gentleman said pressed a desire to see the domain. Horatio, the second Duchess of Butland-and he said, 'Isabelie is a belle,' to they must wait for Gusty, who was mending his spear. which the duchess replied, 'Isabelle was a belle.' " " Vewy near, indeed!" said Furlong.

looked in the glass herself, and added, "Dear me, how edition of quizzing a la mode de saumon. cheek. The old lady not only hightened her own we can wait for Gusty there." color, but that of the witnesses-of Eurlong partieuthis morning, Chariotte, love?" continued the old lady. whistle into a song to the same tune, with very odd

"You sit up so late reading, grandmamma."

You are fond of Literature, I hope, sir?" "Extwemely," replied burlong.

Furlong made a deep obcisance at the word "states- something funny," man "-" as a statesman, of course your reading lies in the more solid department; but if you ever do condescend to read a romance, there is the sweetest thing I work with needle and thread either." ever met I am just now engaged in; it is called 'The, They approached a small out-house as he spoke, and called him, and Tay shortly brought up his fish, and Plus Robber of the Park Mountain.' I have not come the sharp clinking of a hammer fell on the ear. Shoving to the pink mountain yet, but the blue robber is the open a rickety door, the boy cried, "Well, Fogy, I've sport, soon made the basket heavy. most perfect character. The author, however, is brought a gentleman to see you. This is Fogy, the ing of the robber as of the middle age, and soon after further increased, when, in the person of the man called describes him as a young man. Now, how could a the milliner, he beheld a tinker. young man be of the inidute age?"

"It seems a stylinge inaccuwacy," lisped Furlong, thought Furlong. "But poets sometime a pacesame on the pwivelege they have of doing what they please with the hewoes," beimets hanging up in St. Patrick's Cathedral, that at all." venerable pilo!-with the loud peal of the organvibration of the zir to the loud swell of the 'A-a-a-men!' there." -the very banners seem to wave 'Amen!' Oh, that choir; they have a good effect, and some of the your men are so good looking!-and the little boys, too-1 suppose they are choristers' children?" pause by declaring, " he weally couldn't say."

tinned the old lady. "Yes, I think St. Paytwick's a vewy amusing place of wo's tip " "Amusing," said the old lady, half offended. "Inupiring, you mean; not that I think the sermon inter- : ' ! - r young Grady, the state of the anthem, it is so fine! short for Horatio. I was called Horatio after Lord of the river; it had no central support, and conseold harmers, covered with dust!"

"On, as far as that goes," said Furlong "they have man and papa intends me for the Church." amovored the cathedwai very much, fo' they whiteettan, The He and but up nor hameis."

"Whitewash and new banners!" exclaimed the indignant dowager; "the Goths! to remove an atom of the There the younger daughter addressed him with a romantic dust! I would not have let a housemaid into

"Oh, yes: the anthem is continued, but with a small delighted," and "too happy," and the young lady, diffewence:-they used to sing the anthem befo' the se'mon, but the people used to go away afte' the The old downger had been a beauty in her youth- anthem and nevel waited fo' the se'mon, and the one of the belies of the Irich court, and when she heard | bishop, who is pwoud of his pweaching, orde'ed the

of her juvenile joys and triumphs would have given her | hearing of that, and some of the wags in Dublin saying lelight, were it only the coachman that had driven a the bishop was jealous of old Spray; and didn't somearriage to a levee or drawing-room; she could ask him body write something called 'Pulpit versus Organ-

"I cawn't say,"

"Well, I am glad you like the cathedral, sir; but I wish they had not dusted the banners; I used to look at mantic! I suppose you go there every Sunday?"

"That's true indeed," responded the Dowager, "and

"I play the guitar-(citra-cithra-or lute, as it is "Listen to my bird, sir," said the old lady.

The sound of "cuckoo" was repeated twelve times,

"That's my little bird, sir, that tells me secrets; and now, sir, you must leave me; I never receive visits after twelve. I can't sing you 'The lass with the delicate air' to-day, for who would compete with the feathered "I hope his Excellency is well-not that I have the songsters of the grove? and after my sweet little and as she closed the door she said, "You must not "I wather think," said Furlong, "the bay is not suf- mind grandmamma; you know she is sometimes a little queer,"

, but I must not mention his name, because there till poor Furlong was quite weary of them, and exyou ever spear for eels?"

"Ah, who can resist the fascination of the muses? "riddle-diddle-dow," Furlong wondered what a milliner could have to do in such an establishment, and his wonder was not lessened when his guide added,

> "Then the milline' is a man?" said Furlong. "Yes," said the boy, laughing; "and he does not

"What a strange pack of people I have got among,"

The old tinker saw his surprise, and grinned at him. "Quite true, sir. And talking of heroes, I hope the you'd see when he towld you he'd bring you to the mil-that's not your proper name."

the brick rattled harmlessly on the tin.

Nelson, because Lord Nelson's father was a clergy-

* One of the finest tenors of the last century.

"And a nate clargy you'll make," said the tinker. "And why do they call you milline'?" inquired Furlong. The old man looked up and grinned, but said nothing.

"You'll know before long, I'll engage," said Ratty, "won't he, Fogy? You were with old Gran' to-day, weren't vou?"

"Did she sing to you 'The lass with the delicate air'?" said the boy, putting himself in the attitude of a person playing the guitar, throwing up his eyes, and mimicking the voice of an old woman-

"So they call'd her, they call'd her, The lass—the lass

With a delicate air, De-lick-it-lick-it-lick-it The lass with a de-lick-it air,"

The young reseal made frightful mouths, and put out his tongue every time he said "lick-it," and when he had finished, asked Furlong, "Wasn't that the thing?" Furlong told him his grandmamma had been going to "I go in the summe'," said Furlong; "the place is so | sing it, but this pleasure had been deferred till tomorrow.

> "Then you did not hear it?" said Ratty. Furlong answered in the negative.

"Och! murder! I'm sorry I old you." "It is so remy pa'ticula', then?" inquired Furlong. "Oh, you'll find out that, and more too, if you live long enough," was the answer. Then turning to the tinker, he said, " Have you any milliner work in hand,

"To be sure I have," answered the tinker; "who has so good a right to know that as yourself? Throth, you've little to do, I'm thinkin', when you ax that idle question. Oh, you're nate lads! And would noth-

"Oh, 'twas such a nice cock-shot; 'twas impossible not to have a shy at it," said Ratty, chuckling.

"Oh, you're nice lads!" still chimed in the tinker. "Besides," said Ratty, "Gusty bet me a bull-dog pup against a rabbit, I could not smash it in three "Fair, an' he ought to know you betther than that," said the tinker; "for you'd make a fair offer* at any. thing, I think, but an answer to your schoolmasther, Oh, a nate lad you are—a nate lad!—a nice clargy you'll be, your rivirence. Oh, if you hit off the tin commandments as fast as you hit of the tin weathercock, it's a good man you'll be—an' if I never have a headache till then, sure it's happy I'd be!"

"Hold your prate, old Growly," said Ratty; "and why don't you mend the weathercock?" "I must mend the kittle first—and a purty kittle you made of it!—and would nothing surve you but the best kittle in the house to tie to the dog's tail? Ah, Masther Ratty, you're terrible boys, so yiz are!"

amuse ourselves?"

"And huntin' the poor dog, too."

"Well, what matter?-he was a strange dog."

"That makes no differ in the cruelty."

"Ah, bother! you old humbug!-who was it black ened the rag-woman's eye?-ha! Fogy-ha! Fogy-dirty Fogy!" "Go away, Masther Ratty, you're too good, so you are, your rivirince. Faix, I wondher his honor, the Squire, doesn't murdher you sometimes."

"He would, if he could catch us," replied Ratty, "but we run too fast for him, so devil thank him!-and you, too, Fogy,-hai old Growly! Come along, Mr. Furlong, here's Gusty; -- bad scran to you, Fogy?" and he slammed the door as he quitted the tinker.

Caustavus, followed by two younger brothers, Theodore and Godfrey (for O'Grady loved high-sounding names in baptism, though they got twisted into such to the duchess-I must tell you she was Isabelia, boy, whose name was abbreviated to Ratty, told him queer shapes in family use), now led the way over the park toward the river. Some fine timber they passed "We're going to spear for eels," said the boy; "did occasionally; but the ax had manifestly been busy, and the wood seemed thinned rather from necessity than "Ah! poor thing," said the downger, with a sigh, "I should think not," said Furlong, with a knowing | for improvement; the , aths were choked with weeds "she was beginning to be a little passes then;" she smile, who suspected this was intended to be a second and fallen leaves, and the rank moss added its evidence of neglect. The boys pointed out anything they thought pale I am this morning!" and pulling out one of the "You think I'm joking," said the boy "but it's worthy of observation by the way, such as the best ittle drawers from the Japan looking-glass, she took famous sport, I can tell you; but if you're tired of places to find a hare, the most covered approach to out a pot of rouge and hightened the color on her waiting here, come along with me to the milliner's, and the river to get a shot at wild ducks, or where the best young wood was to be found from whence to cut a While following the boy, who jumped along to the tune stick. On reaching their point of destination, which larly, who was quite surprised. "Why am I so very pale of a jig he was whistling, now and then changing the was where the river was less rapid, and its banks sedgy and thickly grown with flaggers and bulrushes, the words indeed, and a burden of gibberish ending with sport of spearing for eels commenced. Gusty first undertook the task, and, after some vigorous plunges of his implement into the water, he brought up the prey, wriggling between its barbed prongs. Furlong was "As a statesman," continued the old lady-to whom "The milliner is a queer chap, and maybe he'll tell us amazed, for he thought this, like the salmon-fishing, was intended as a quiz, and, after a few more examples of Gusty's prowess, he undertook the sport; a short time, however, fatigued his unpracticed arm, and he relinquished the spear to Theodore, or Tay, as they thus, one after another, the boys, successful in their

Then, and not till then, they desired Furlong to carry guilty of a strange for retfulness; he begins by speak- milliner, sir," said he to Furlong, whose surprise was it; he declared he had no curiosity whatever in that line, but the boys'would not let him off so easy, and told him the practice there was, that every one should take his share in the day's sport, and as he could not eatch the fish he should carry it. He attempted a parley, and suggested he was only a visitor; but they only "I suppose it was a nate young woman you thought laughed at him-said that might be a very good Dublin joke, but it would not pass in the country. He then at-Knights of St. Patrick are well-I do admire them so liner-hall hal Oh, they're nate lads the Master tempted laughingly to decline the honor; but Ratty nmont-tis so interesting to see their banners and O'Gradys; divil a thing they call by the proper name, turning round to a monstrous dog, which hitherto had followed them, quietly said, "Here! Bloodybones; here. "Yes, we do," said the boy, sharply; "we call our boy! at him, sir!-make him do his work, boy!" The sublime-isn't ity-the banners almost tremble in the selves by our proper name. Ha! Fogy, I have you bristling savage made a low growl, and fixed his eyes on Furloug, who attempted to remonstrate; but he very "Divil a taste, as smart as you think yourself, soon gave that up, for another word from the boy. swell it so fine!-I think they are fond of swells in the Masther Ratty; you call yourselves gentlemen, and urged the dog to a howl and a crouch, preparatory to a spring, and Furlong made no further resistance, but Ratty, who was scraping triangles on the door with a took up the basket amid the uproarious laughter of the piece of broken brick, at once converted his pencil into boys, who continued their sport, adding every now the old lady made a halt, and Furlong filled up the a missile, and let fly at the head of the tinker, who and then to the weight of Furlong's load; and whenseemed quite prepared for such a result, for, raising the ever he lagged behind they cried out, "Como "I hope you admire the service at St. Patrick's?" con- kettle he was mending, he caught the shot adroitly, and along, man-Jack!" which was the complimentary name they called him by for the rest of the day. Furlong "Ha!" said the tinker, mockingly, "you missed me, thought spearing for eels worse sport than fishing for like your mammy's blessin';" and he pursued his work. salmon, and was rejoiced when a turn homeward was "Will a very odd name he calls you," said Furlong, taken by the party; but his annoyances were not yet ended. On their return, their route lay across a plank quently sprung considerably to the foot of the passen-

> *A "fair offer" is a phrase among the Irish peas antry, meaning a successful aim.

in jumping till he made it spring too high for poor dress in any company, had she been permitted, but the Furlong to hold his footing any longer: so squatting on terrors of her son had sufficient influence over her to the plank, he got astride upon it, and held on with his | have this laid aside for a more seemly coiffure when she lands, every descending vibration of the board dipping appeared at dinner or in the drawing-room; but while his daudy boots in the water.

"Well done, Ratty!" shouted all the boys. "Splash him, Tay!" cried Gusey. "Puli away, | temper.

Goggy." The three boys now began pelting large stones into the river close beside Furlong, splashing him so thoroughly, that he was wringing wet in five minutes. In vain Furlong shouted, "Young gentlement young gen- tinker" the milliner." tlemen!" and, at last, when he threatened to complain to their father, they recommenced worse than before, excluded the old lady from the knowledge of any exand vowed they'd throw him into the stream if he did not promise to be silent on the subject: for, to use their own words, if they were beaten, they might as well duck | that the downger sometimes got scent of proceedings him at once, and have the "worth of their licking." At walk off the plank. "Remember," said Ratty, "gou won't tell we hoised* you?"

land.

and Miss O'Grady appeared, surrounded by a crowd of herself in some ancient finery, rather the worse for little pet-dogs. She shook her head in a threatening wear, and which might have been interesting to an manner at the offenders, and all the little dogs set up a lantiquary. yelping bark, as if to enforce their mistress's anger. The snappish barking of the pets was returned by one footsteps rapidly paced passages, and pattered up and seeing the bewilderment of Furlong and Andy. "What hoarse bay from "Broodybones," which silenced the down stairs. Andy was the nimblest at the half-door is it at all?" and he stooped as he spoke, and lifted the little dogs, as a broadside from a seventy-four would at the first summons of the bell; and, in a livery too valance. But here description must end, and imaginadumbfounder a flock of privateers, and the boys re- short in the arms and too wide in the shoulders, he tion supply the scene of fury and confusion which sucturned the sister's threat by a universal shout of "Tell- | bustled here and there, his auxiety to be useful only tale!"

"Go home, tell-tale!" they all cried; and with an action equally simultaneous, they stooped one and all for pebbles, and pelted Miss Augusta so vigorously, that she and her dogs were obliged to run for it.

CHAPTER XVI.

HAVING recounted Furlong's out-door adventures, it is necessary to say something of what was passing at his justice-room to transact business, a principal feature in which was the examination of Handy Andy, touch- O'Gradys caught him in their company, they might room, shaking his fist at Furlong, and, after a volley of ing the occurrences of the evening he drove Furlong to Merryvale; for though Andy was clear of the charge for which he had been taken into custody, namely, the murder of Furlong, O'Grady thought he might have been a party to some conspiracy to drive the stranger to the enemy's camp, and therefore put him to the and the door locked outside. question very sharply. This examination he had set his heart upon; and reserving it as a bonne bouche, diswiesed all preliminary cases in a very off-hand manner, just as men carelessly swallow a few oysters preparatory to dinner. As for Andy, when he was summoned to the justiceroom, he made sure it was for the purpose of being charged with robbing the post-office, and cast a sidelong glance at the effigy of the man hanging on the wall, as he was marched up to the desk where O'Grady sat in magisterial dignity; and, therefore, when he found it was only for driving a gentleman to the wrong honse all the pother was made, his heart was lightened of a heavy load, and he answered briskly enough. The string of question and reply was certainly an entangled come up and kill that fellow there." one, and left O'Grady as much puzzled as before whether Andy was stupid and innocent, or too knowing to let himself be caught-and to this opinion he clung at last. In the course of the inquiry, he found Andy him he knew all about waiting on table, and so forth, clothes on him. Let me out, Ratty-let me out!" and O'Grady being in want of an additional man-servant in the house while his honorable guest, Sackville Scatterbrain, should be on a visit with him, Andy was told he should be taken on trial for a month. Indeed, a month was as long as most servants could stay in the house-they came and went as fast as figures in a magic lantern.

Neck-or-Nothing Hall in his absence.

immediately scrubbing up extras of all sorts to make the reception of the honorable candidate for the county as brilliant as possible, not only for the honor with the extremity of terror in hor look-a terror so Where are my pistols? Blood and first will nobody of the house, but to make a favorable impression on the coming guest; for Augusta, the eldest of Furlong, who jumped from the curtains, when he girl, was marriageable, and to her tather's ears "The Honorable Mrs. Sackville Scatterbrain" would have sounded much more agreeably than "Miss O'Grady." "Well-who knows?" said O'Grady to his wife; "such things have come to pass. Furnish her up, and make her look smart at dinner-he has a good fortune, and will be a peer one of these days-worth catching.

Tell her so."

Leaving these laconic observations and directions behind him, he set off to the neighboring town to meet Scatterbrain, and to make a blow-out at the postoffice about the missing letters. This he was the more anxious to do, as the post-office was kept by the brother of M'Garry, the apothecary; and since O'Grady had been made to pay so dearly for thrashing him, he swore eternal vengeance against the whole family. The post-master could give no satisfactory answer to the charge made against him, and O'Grady threatened a complaint to headquarters, and prophesied the postmaster's dismissal. Satisfied for the present with this , piece of prospective vengeance, he proceeded to the inn, and awaited the arrival of his guest.

In the interim, at the Hall, Mrs. O'Grady gave Augusta the necessary hints, and recommended a short walk to improve her color; and it was in the execution of this order that Miss O'Grady's perambulation was cut short by the pelting her sweet brothers gave her.

The internal bustle of the establishment caught the attention of the dowager, who contrived to become ac- outsite. Furlong said he always did. quainted with its cause, and set about making herself as fascinating as possible; for though, in the ordinary routine of the family affairs, she kept herself generally secluded in her own apartments, whenever any affair of an interesting nature was pending, nothing could make her refrain from joining any company which "Wather fatigued-but I'll be bette' pwesently. What might be in the house-nothing-not even O'Grady do you wish with me, sir?"

ger, who was afforded no protection from handrail, or himself. At such times, she too, became strangely exeven a swinging rope, and this rendered its passage dif- cited, and invariably executed one piece of farcial abficult to an unpracticed person. When Furlong was surdity, of which, however, the family contrived to self; I'll sit down here till you ern open your letters; I told to make his way across, he hesitated, and, after | confine the exercise to her own room. It was wearing many assurances on his part that he could not attempt on her head a tin concern, something like a chimneyit. (firsty said he would lead him over in security, and | cowl, ornamented by a small weathercock, after the took his hand for the purpose; but when he had him 'fashion of those which surmount church-steeples; this, just in the center, he loosed himself from Furlong's | she declared, influenced her health wonderfully, by iniold, and ran to the opposite side. While Furlong was dienting the variation of the wind in her stomach, praying him to return, Ratty stole behind him suttl- which she maintained to be the grand ruling principle ntly far to have purchase enough on the plank, and of human existence. She would have worn this headshe yielded really through fear, she affected to be intiuenced through tenderness to her son's infirmity of

"It is very absurd," she would say, "that, Gustavus should interfere with my toilette; but, poor fellow, he' very queer, you know, and I humor him."

This at once explains why Master Ratty called the

It will not be wondered at that the family carefully eiting subject; but those who know what a talkative race children and servants are, will not be surprised which were meant to be kept secret. The pending eleclast a compromise being effected, Furlong stood up to tion, and the approaching visit of the candidate, somehow or other, came to her knowledge, and of course she put on her tin chimney-pot. Thus attired, she sat "I won't indeed," said Furlong; and he got safe to watching the avenue all day; and when she saw O'Crady return in a handsome traveling carriage with "But I will!" cried a voice from a neighboring wood; a stranger, she was quite happy, and began to attire

The house soon rung with bustle-bells rung, and nim a hearty cursing from O'Grady.

The carriage was unpacked, and letter-boxes, parcels, and portmanteaus strewed the hall. Andy was desired to carry the latter to "the gentleman's room," and, throwing the portmanteau over his shoulder, he ran up- every abusive epithet which could be showered on man stairs. It was just after the commotion greated by the arrival of the Honorable Mr. Scatterbrain that Farlong returned to the house, wet and dreary.

O'Grady, on leaving the breakfast-table, retired to fancied he was now safe from further molestation, with and Scatterbrain himself at last; O'Grady off the time an inward protestation that the next time the Master foaming at the mouth, stamping up and down the bless themselves; when he heard a loud sound of hust- names impossible to remember or print, always conling near his door, and Miss Augusta's voice audibly [cluding with the phrase, "Wait till I get my pistols!" exclaiming, "Behave yourself, Ratty!—Gusty, let me go!"—when, as the words were uttered, the door of all about?" his room was shoved open, and Miss Augusta thrust in,

> Furlong had not half his clothes on. Augusta exclaimed, "Gracious me!"—first put up her hands to her | ch?" eyes, and then turned her face to the door.

the vicious little rascal, with a malicious laugh, said, here—and then, how will you be?" "Ratty, you wretch!" cried Augusta, kicking at the door, "let me out!" "Not a bit, till you promise."

"Oh, fie, Maste O'Gwady!" said Furlong. "I'll scream, Ratty, if you don't let me out!" cried a tremor.

Augusta.

"Oh, don't squeam, Miss O'Gwady!" said Furlong. very vivaciously, from the bed-curtains; "don't squeam, pway!"

"I'm not squeamish, sir," said Miss Augusta; "but

"Well, will you tell on us?"

"Pon your honor?"

of this!"

the door locked. ""Oh, what will become of me!" said the poor girl, "No," said O'Grady; "but somebody will be soon. excessive, that she was quite heedless of the dishabilie bring me my pistols?"

heard O'Grady coming. half frightened to death himself. "When we explain brain shoved Andy outside the room. the affair-"

"Explain!" said the girl, gasping. "Oh, you don't know papa!" As she spoke, the heavy tramp ceased at the door-a sharp tap succeeded, and Furlong's name was called in the gruff voice of the Squire.

Furlong could scarcely articulate a response. "Let me in," said O'Grady.

"I am not dwessed, sir," answered Furlong. "No, matter," said the Squire, "you're not a wo-

"I'll be down with you as soon as I am dwessed, sir." replied Furlong.

"I want to speak to you immediately—and here are letters for you-open the door."

Augusta signified by signs to Furlong that resistance would be in vain; and hid herself under the bed. "Come in, sir," said Furlong, when she was secreted.

"The door is fastened," said O'Grady.

"Turn the key, sir," said Furlong.

Augusta wrung her hauds.

O'Grady unlocked the door, and was so inconsistent a person, that he never thought of the impossibility of Furlong's having locked it, but, in the richest spirit of bulls, asked him if he always fastened his door on the

"What's the matter with you?" inquired O'Grady. "You're as white as the sheet there;" and he pointed to the tune of "Haste to the Wedding!" to the bed as he spoke.

Furlong grew whiter as he pointed to that quarter. "What ails you, man?-aren't you well?"

"Here are letters for you-I want to know what's in i them. Scatterbrain's come do you know that?"

"No-I did not."

"Don't stand there in the cold-go on dressing yourwant to tell you something besides." O'Grady took a chair as he spoke.

Furlong assumed all the composure he could; and the girl began to hope she should remain undiscovered, and most likely she would have been so lucky, lust not to Genius of Disaster, with aspect malign, waved her sable wand, and called her chosen servant. It ind Andy to her old. He, her faithful and unfailing mun ter, obeyed the call, and at that crined juncture co time gave a loud knock at the chamber door.

"Come in," said O'Grady.

Andy opened the door, and popped in his head. "I beg your pardon, sir, but I kem for the jindeman's portmantle." "What gentleman?" asked O'Grady.

"The Honorable, sir; I tuk his portmantle to the wrong room, sir; and I'm come for it now, bekase he wants it."

"There's no po'tmanteau here," said Furlong. "O yis, sir," said Andy; "I put it unther the bed."

"Well, take it and be off," seid O'Grady.

"No-no-no," said Furlong, "don't distu'b ne woom, if you blease, till I have done dwessing.1 "But the Honorable is diressing too, sir; and that's why he wants the portmantle." "Take it, then," said the Squire.

Furlong was paralyzed, and could offer no further resistance: Andy stooped, and lifting the valuee of the bed to withdraw the portmanteau, dropped it suddenly, and exclaimed, "Oh, Lord?"
"What's the matter?" said the Squire.

"Nothin', sir," said Andy, looking seared.

"Then take the portmanteau, and be hanged to you."

"Oh, I'll wait fill the jintleman's done, sir," said Andy, retiring. "What the devil is all this about?" said the Squire, ceeded. At the first flerce volley of imprecation putting him in everybody's way, and ending in getting O'Grady gave vent to, Andy ran off and clarmed the family, Augusta screamed, and Furlong hold for support by the bedpost, while, between every hurricane of oaths, O'tirady ran to the door, and shouted for his pistols, and anon returned to the chamber to vent and woman. The prodigious uprear soon brought the whole house to the spot; Mrs. O'Grady and the two spare girls among the first; Met, and the cook, and the He retired to his room to change his clothes, and scullion, and all the housemaids in rapid succession;

"Gusty, dear," said his trembling wife, "what is it

He glared upon her with his flashing eyes, and said, "Fine education you give your children, ma'am. Where have you brought up your daughters to go to,

"To church, my dear," said Mrs. O'Grady, meekly; Furlong hid himself in the bed-curtains, while Ratty, for she being a Roman Catholic, O'Clearly was very jealous of his daughters being reared stauch Protest-"Now, promise you'll not tell papa, or I'll bring him up ants, and she, poor simple woman, thought that was the drift of his question.

"Church, my eye, woman! Church, indeed! 'faith, she ought to have gone there before she came where I found her. Thunder an' ouns, where are my pistolay" "Where has she gone to, my love?" asked the wife in "To the divil, ma'am. Is that all you know about "If you screech papa will hear you, and then he'll it?" said O'Grady. "And you wish to know where she

"Yes, love," said his wife.

"Then look under that bed, ma'am, and you'll se her without spectacles."

Mrs. O'Grady now gave a scream, and the girls and had been in service at Merryvale; and Andy, telling it's dreadful to be shut up with a man who has no the housemaids joined in the chorus. Augusta but lowed from under the bed, "Manimal mamma! indeed it's all Ratty-I never did it."

At this moment, to help the confusion, a fresh appearance made its way into the room; it was that of " 'Pon my honor, no! Make haste! Oh, if papa knew | the Dowager O'Grady-arrayed in all the bygone finery of faded full-dress, and the tin chimney-pot on her Searcely had the words been uttered, when the heavy head. "What is all this about?" she exclaimed, with tramp and gruff voice of O'Grady resounded in the pas- an air of authority; "though my weather-cock tells Andy was installed in his new place, and set to work sage, and the boys scampered off in a fright, leaving me the wind is nor west, I did not expect such a storm. Is any one killed?"

"Here they are, sir," said Handy Andy, running in. O'Grady made a rush for the pistols, but his mother "Don't be fwightened, Miss O'Gwady," said Furlong, and his wife threw themselves before him, and Scatter-

"Confound you, you numskull! would you give pistols into the hands of a frantic man?"

"Sure, he ax'd for them, sir," "Go out o' this, you blockhead! Go and hide them somewhere, where your master won't find them." Andy retired, muttering something about the hardness of a servant's case, in being scolded and called names for doing his master's hidding. Scriverbrain returned to the room, where the contraion was still to full bloom; O'Grady swearing between his mother and wife, while Furlong endeavored to explain how the young lady happened to be in his room; and she kicking in hysteries amidst the maids and her sisters, while Scatterbrain ran to and fro between the parties, giving an ear to Furlong, an eye to O'Grady, and smelling salts to his daughter.

The case was a hard one to a milder man than O'Grady-his speculation about Scatterbrain all knock-'ed on the head, for it could not be expected he would marry the lady who had been found under another man's bed. To hush the thing up would be impossible, after the publicity his own fury had given to the affair, "Would she ever be married after such an aff ur was eclate?" The question rushed into his head on one side, and the answer rushed in at the other, and met it with a plump "No!"-the question and an worthen joined hands in O'Grady's mind, and danced cown the

"Yes," he said, slapping his forchead, "she must be p arried at once," Then, turning to Furlong, he said: "You're not married, I hope?"

Furlong acknowledged he was not, though he regretted if the moment he had made the admission.

"Tis well for you," said O'Grady, "for it has saved your life. You shall marry her, thou!" He never thought of asking Furtong's acquiescence in the measure. "Come here, you baggage!" he cried to Augusta, as he laid hold of her hand, and pulled her up from her chair; "come here! I intended you for a better man; but since you have such a hang-dog taste, why, go to him!" And he shoved her over to Furlong. "There!" he said, addressing him, "take her, since you will have her. We'll speak of her fortune after."

^{*} A vulgarism for " hoisted,"

The poor girl stood abashed, sobbing aloud, and tears poured from her downcast eyes. Furlong was so utterly taken by surprise, that he was riveted to the spot where he stood, and could not advance a step toward his drooping intended. At this awkward moment, the glorious old dowager came to the rescue; she advanced, tin chimney-pot and all, and taking a hand of each of the principals in hers, she joined them together, in a theatrical manner, and ejaculated, with a benignant air, "Bless you, my children!"

In the midst of the mingled rage, confusion, fright, and astonishment of the various parties present, there was something so exquisitely absurd in the old woman's proceeding, that nearly every one felt inclined to laugh; but the terror of O'Grady kept their risible faculties in check. Fate, however, decreed the finale should be comic; for the cook, suddenly recollection herself, exclaimed, "Oh, murther! the goose will be burned!" and ran out of the room; a smothered burst of laughter succeeded, which roused the ire of O'Grady, who, making a charge right and left among the delinquents, the room was soon cleared, and the party dispersed in various directions, O'Grady's voice rising loud above the general confusion, as he swore his way down-stairs, kicking his mother's tin turban before him.

CHAPTER XVII.

Canvassing before an election resembles skirmishing before a battle-the skirmishing was over, and the arrival of the Honorable Sackville Scatterbrain was like the first gun that commences an engagement—and now both parties were to enter on the final struggle.

A jolly group sat in Murphy's dining-parlor on the eve of the day fixed for the nomination. Hitting points opening the door. of speeches were discussed—plans for bringing up voters-tricks to interrupt the business of the opposite said Murphy to his friends-"so up with the supper, party—certain allusions on the hustings that would Dan. Up with the supper! Up with the Egans! Down make the enemy lose temper; and, above all, every- with the Scatterbrains - hurral ! - we'll beat them thing that could cheer and amuse the people, and make gayly." them rejoice in their cause.

"Oh, let me alone for that much," said Murtough. "I have engaged every piper and fiddler within twenty miles round, and devil a screech of a chanter* or a scrape of catcut Scatterbrain can have for love or money-that's one grand point."

"But," said Tom Durfy, "he has engaged the yeo-

"What of that?" asked Dick Dawson; "a band is all majority." very well for making a splash in the first procession to the hustings, but what good is it in working out the details?" "What do you call details?" said Durfy.

"Why, the popular tunes in the public-houses and in the tally-rooms, while the fellows are waiting to go up. Then the dances in the evening-Wowl-won't Scatterbrain's lads look mighty shy when they know the Eganites are kicking their heels to 'Moll in the Wad,' while they haven't a lift to shake their bones to?"

"To be sure," said Murphy; "we'll have the deserters to our cause from the enemy's camp before the first night is over; wait till the girls know where the fiddlers are—and won't they make the lads join us!"

"I believe a woman would do a deal for a dance," raid Dr. Growling; "they are immensely fond of saltatory motion. I remember, once in my life, I used to flirt with a little actress who was a great favorite in a provincial town where I lived, and she was invited to a ball there, and confided to me she had no silk stockings to appear in, and without them her presence at the ball was out of the question,"

"That was a hint to you to buy the stockings," said

Dick.

"To go in cotton, I suppose," returned Dick. "Out again, sir-you'd never guess it; and only a woman could have hit on the expedient; it was the fashion in those days for ladies in full dress to wear pink stockings, and she proposed painting her legs!" "Painting her legs!" they all exclaimed.

"Fact, sir," said the doctor; "and she relied on me for telling her if the cheat was successful-"

"And was it?" asked Durfy. "Don't be in a hurry, Tom. I complied on one condition-namely, that I should be the painter."

"Oh, you villain!" cried Dick. "A capital bargain!" said Tom Durfy.

"But not a safe covenant," added the attorney "Don't interrupt me, gentlemen," said the doctor. "I got some rose-pink accordingly, and I defy all the hosiers in Nottingham to make a tighter fit than I did on little Jinney; and a prettier pair of stockings I never saw."

"And she went to the ball?" said Dick. "She did!"

"And the trick succeeded?" added Durfy. "So completely," said the doctor, "that several ladies asked her to recommend her dyer to them! So you see what a woman will do to go to a dance. Poor little Jinney !- she was a merry minx. By-the-by, she boxed my ears that night, for a joke I made about the stockings. 'Jinney,' said I, 'for fear your stockings should fall down when you're dancing, hadn't you better let me paint a pair of garters on them?"

The fellows laughed at the doctor's quaint conceit business of the election.

"What next?" he said, "public-houses and tallyrooms to have pipers and fiddlers-ay-and we'll get up as good a march, too, as Scatterbrain, with all his yearnanry band; think a cartful of fiddlers would have jump, and the crowd roar with merriment; or, perhaps, a fine effect!"

"If we could only get a double-bass among them!"

said Dick. "Talking of double-basses," said the doctor, "did you ever hear the story of the sailor in an admiral's ship, who, when some fine concert was to be given on

"Hang your concerts and stories!" said Murphy;

"let us go on with the election."

* The principal tube of a bagpipe, + In those times election often lasted many days.

"Oh, the doctor's story!" cried Tom Durfy and Dick Dawson together.

"Well, sir," continued the doctor, "a sailor was banding in, over the side, from a boat which bore the instruments from shore, a great lot of fiddles. When some tenors came into his hand he said those were real good-sized fiddles; and when a violoncello appeared, Jack, supposing it was to be held between the hand and the shoulder, like a violin, declared 'He must be a strapping chap that that fiddle belonged to! But when the double-bass made its appearance, 'My eyes and limbs!' cried Jack, 'I would like to see the chap as plays | thing.'

if you are, now for the election. You say, Dick, Major Dawson is to propose your brother-in-law?"

"And he'll do it well, too; the major makes a very good straightforward speech." "Yes," said Dick; "the old cock is not a bad hand at it. But I have a suspicion he's going to make a greater oration than usual, and read some long rigmarolish old records," "That will never do," said Murphy; "as long as a man looks Pat in the face, and makes a good rattling speech 'out o' the face, Pat will listen to him; but didn't do that." when a lad takes to heavy readings, Pat grows tired. We must persuade the major to give up the reading."

"Persuade my father!" cried Dick. "When did you ever hear of his giving up his own opinion?"

"If he could be prevailed on even to shorten—" said Murphy. "Oh, leave him to me," said Dick, laughing; "I'll take care he'll not read a word."

"Manage that, Dick, and you're a jewel!"

him read, if he can."

"Then, that's the best thing we could discuss, boys,"

"Hollow!" said Durfy, "Not hollow," said Dick; "we'll have a tussle for it," energies of both parties—developing their tact and invention, and, at last, the return secured by a large

"But think of the glory of a large one," said Dick. "Ay," added Durfy, "besides crushing the hope of a petition on the part of your enemy to pull down the majority."

"But think of Murphy's enjoyment," said the doctor. "in defending the seat, to say nothing of the bill of "You have me there, doctor," said Murphy; "a fair hit, I grant you; but see, the supper is on the table. To it, my lads; to it! and then a jolly glass to drink success to our friend Egan."

shapes of well-wishing toasts; in short, to have seen the deep interest those men took in the success of their friend, might have gladdened the heart of a philan- turned to the yard, and laid down the trumpet unobthropist; though there is no knowing what Father served. Mathew, had he flourished in those times, might have said to their overflowing benevolence.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The morning of nomination which dawned on Neckor-Nothing Hall saw a motley group of O'Grady's retainers assembling in the stable-yard, and the out- your heads off, and split the sky." offices rung to laugh and joke over a rude but plentiful "No-you're out," said Growling. "She knew I was, breakfast-tea and coffee, there, had no place-but of action about the same time, and a merrier pack of as poor as herself; but though she could not rely on meat, potatoes, milk, beer, and whisky were at the rascals never was on the march. Murphy, in accordmy purse, she had every confidence in my taste and option of the body-guard, which was selected for the ance with his preconceived notion of a "fine effect," judgment, and consulted me on a plan she formed for | honor of escorting the wild chief and his friend, the had literally "a cart full of fiddlers;" but the fiddlers roing to the ball in proper twig. Now, what do you candidate, into the town. Of this party was the yeo- hadn't it all to themselves, for there was another cart manry-band of which Tom Durfy spoke, though, to say full of pipers; and, by way of mockery to the grandeur the truth, considering Tom's apprehensions on the sub- of Scatterbrain's band, he had four or five boys with ject, it was of slender force. One trumpet, one clario- pridirons, which they played upon with pokers, and net, a fife, a big drum, and a pair of cymbals, with a "real nigger" to play them, were all they could muster.

After clearing off everything in the shape of breakfast, the "musicianers" amused the retainers, from joking rung round the dwelling, to which none contributed more largely than the trumpeter, who fancied himself an immensely clever fellow, and had a heap of cut-and-dry jokes at his command, and practical drolleries in which he indulged to the great entertainment of all, but of none more than Andy, who was in the thick of the row, and in a divided ecstacy between the "blaky-moor's" turban and cymbals and the trumpeter's jokes and music; the latter articles having a certain resemblance, by-the-by, to the former in clumsiness and noise, and therefore suited to Andy's taste. Whenever occasion offered, Andy got near the big result of his ambitious achievement.

Andy was not lost on the trumpeter; "Arrah, maybe you'd like to have a touch at these?" said the joker. holding up the cymbals.

"Is it hard to play them, sir?" inquired Andy. "Hard!" said the trumpeter; "sure they're not hard them-rub your fingers inside." Andy obeyed; and his finger was chopped between as he lifted it to his mouth. about the garters, but Murphy called them back to the the two brazen plates. Andy roared, the bystanders Sometimes he would come behind an unsuspecting boor, and give, close to his ear, a discordant bray from his trumpet, like the note of a jackass, which made him when the clarionet or the fife was engaged in giving the people a tune, he would drown either, or both of them, in a wild yell of his instrument. As they could not make reprisals upon him, he had his own way in playing whatever he liked for his audience; and in doing so indulged in all the airs of a great artist—pulling out one crook from another-blowing through them softly, and shaking the moisture from them in a tasty style-arranging them with a fastidious nicety-then, after the the same fate as O'Grady's voice. The trumpeter could final adjustment of the mouth-piece, lipping the instru- judge of O'Grady's rage from the fierceness of his acment with an affectation exquisitely grofesque; but tions only, and answered him in pantomimic expression, before he began he always asked for another drink.

"It's not for myself," he would say. "but for the thrumpet, the crayther; the divil a note she can blow without a dhrop.'

Then, taking a mug of drink, he would present it to the bell of the trumpet, and afterward transfer it to his own lips, always bowing to the instrument first, and saying, "Your health, ma'am!"

This was another piece of delight to the mob, and Andy thought him the funniest fellow he ever met though he did chop his finger.

"Faix, sir, an' it is dary work, I'm sure, playing the

"Dhry!" said the trumpeter, "pon my ruffles and "Well, doctor, are you done?" cried Murphy; "for, tuckers-and that's a cambric oath-it's worse nor a lime-burnin', so it is-it makes a man's throat as parched as pays." "Who dar says pays?" cried the drummer.

"Howld your prate!" said the trum peter, elegantly, and silenced all reply by playing a tune. As soon as it was ended, he turned to Andy and asked for a cork.

Andy gave it to him. The man of jokes affected to put it into the trumpet.

"What's that for, sir?" asked Andy.

"To bottle up the music," said the trumpeter-"sure all the music would run about the place if I

Andy gave a vague sort of "ha, ha!" as if he were not quite sure whether the trumpeter was in jest or earnest, and thought at the moment that to play the trumpet and practical jokes must be the happiest life in the world. Filled with this idea, Andy was on the watch how he could possess himself of the trumpet, for could he get one blast on it, he would be happy: a chance at last opened to him; after some time the lively owner of the treasure laid down his instrument to "I will," said Dick. "I'll take the glasses out of his handle a handsome blackthorn which one of the retainspectacles the morning of the nomination, and then let ers was displaying, and he made some flourishes with the weapon to show that music was not his only accom-"Capital, Dick; and now the next point of discussion plishment. Andy seized the opportunity and the trumpet, and made off to one of the sheds where they had "Supper, ready to come up, sir," said a servant, been regaling; and, shutting the door to secure himself from observation, he put the trumpet to his mouth and distended his cheeks near to bursting with the violence of his efforts to produce a sound; but all his puffing was unavailing for some minutes. At last a faint cracked squeak answered a more desperate blast than before, and Andy was delighted. "Everything must have a beginning," thought Andy, "and maybe I'll get a tune out of it yet." He tried again, and increased "So much the better," cried Murphy; "I would not in power; for a sort of strangled screech was the regive a fig for an easy victory-there's no fun in it. sult. Andy was in ecstasy, and began to indulge vis-Give me the election that is like a race—now one ahead, ions of being one day a trumpeter; he strutted up and and then the other; the closeness calling out all the down the shed like the original he so envied, and repeated some of the drolleries he heard him utter. He also imitated his actions of giving a drink to the trumpet, and was more generous to the instrument than the owner, for he really poured about half a pint of beer down its throat: he then drank its health, and finished by "bottling up the music," absolutely cramming a cork into the trumpet. Now Andy, having no idea the trumpeter made a sham of the action, made a vigorous plunge of a goodly cork into the throat of the instrument, and, in so doing, the cork went further than he intended: he tried to withdraw it, but his clumsy fin gers, instead of extracting, only drove it in deeper-he became alarmed-and, seizing a fork, strove with its assistance to remedy the mischief he had done, but the And glass after glass they did drink in all sorts and more he poked, the worse; and, in his fright, he thought the safest thing he could do was to crain the cork out of sight altogether, and having soon done that, he re-

Immediately after, the procession to the town started. O'Grady gave orders that the party should not be throwing away their powder and shot, as he called it, in untimely huzzas and premature music. "Wait till you come to the town, boys,' said he, "and then you may smash away as hard as you can; blow

The party of Merryvale was in motion for the place half a dozen strapping fellows carrying large iron teatrays, which they whopped after the manner of a Chinese gong.

It so happened that the two roads from Merryvale time to time, with a tune on the clarionet, life, or and Neckor-Nothing Hall met at an acute angle, at the trumpet, while they waited the appearance of the same end of the town, and it chanced that the rival party from the house. Uproarious mirth and noisy candidates and their retinues arrived at this point about the same time

"There they are!" said Murphy, who presided in the cart full of fiddlers like a leader in an orchestra, with a shillelah for his baton, which he flourished over his head as he shouted, "Now give it to them, your sowls! -rasp and lilt away, boys!-slate the gridirons, Mike!smaddher the tay-tray, Tom!"

The uproar of strange sounds that followed, shouting included, may be easier imagined than described; and O'Crady, answering the war-cry, sung out to his band -"What are you at, you lazy rascals?-don't you hear them blackguards beginning?—fire away, and be hanged drum, too, and gave it a thump, delighted with the to you!" His rascals shouted, bang went the drum, and clang went the cymbals, the clarionet squeaked, and the fife tooted, but the trumpet-ah!-the trumjet—their great reliance—where was the trumpet? O'Grady inquired in the precise words, with a diabolical addition of his own. "Where the d- is the trumpet?" said he; he looked over the side of the carat all-but as soft and smooth as satin inside-just feel riage as he spoke, and saw the trumpeter spitting out a mouthful of beer which had run from the instrument

"Bad luck to you, what are you wasting your time laughed, and the trumpeter triumphed in his wit. | there for?" thundered O'Grady, in a rage; "why didn't you spit out when you were young, and you'd be a clean old man? Blow and be d-d to you!"

The trumpeter filled his lungs for a great blast, and put the trumpet to his lips—but in vain; Andy had bottled his music for him. O'Grady, seeing the inflated cheeks and protruding eyes of the musician, whose visage was crimson with exertion, and yet no sound produced, thought the fellow was practicing one of his jokes upon him, and became excessively indignant; he thundered anathemas at him, but his voice was drowned in the din of the drum and cymbals, which were plied so vigorously, that the clarionet and fife shared holding up his trumpet and pointing into the bell, with thing was wrong; but this was all mistaken by the flerce O'Grady, who only saw in the trumpeter's grins the insolent intention of jibing him.

"Blow, you blackguard, blow!" shouted the squire. Bang went the drum.

"Blow-or I'll break your neck!" Crash went the cymbals. heard!" roared the excited man; but as he was stand- and Furlong looked more sheepish than ever, as he foling up on the seat of the carriage, and flung his arms | lowed his leaders. about wildly as he spoke, the drummer thought his action was meant to stimulate him to further exertion, and he banged away louder than before.

squire, who, ordering the carriage to pull up, flung open the door and jumped out, made a rush at the drummer, seized his principal drumstick, and giving him a bang over the head with it, cursed him for a rascal for not stopping when he told him; this silenced all the instruments together, and O'Grady, seizing the trumpeter the multitude blowing in his favor. On concluding (as by the back of the neck, shook him violently, while he "the boys" thought) his address, which was straightdenounced with flerce imprecations his insolence in daring to practice a joke on him. The trumpeter pro- | posed "Three cheers for the owld Major." Three deaftested his innocence, and O'Grady called him a lying ening peals followed the hint. rascal, finishing his abuse by clenching his fist in a menacing attitude, and telling him to play.

"I can't, yer honor!" "You lie, you scoundrel!"

"There's something in the trumpet, sir."

of it-"

"I can't blow it out of it, sir." "Hold your prate, you rufflan; blow this minute."

"Arrah, thry it yourself, sir," said the frightened man, handing the instrument to the squire. "D-n your impudence, you rascal; do you think I'd blow anything that was in your dirty mouth? Blow, I tell you, or it will be worse for you." "By the vartue o' my oath, your honor-"

"Blow, I tell you!"

"By the seven blessed candles-"

"Blow, I tell you!"

"The trumpet is choked, sir." "There will be a trumpeter choked, soon," said O'Grady, gripping him by the neck-handkerchief, with his knuckles ready to twist into his throat. "By this and that I'll strangle you, if you don't play this minute, husky voice. "Silence |-or I'll have the court-house you humbugger.'

"By the Blessed Virgin, I'm not humbuggin', your honor," stammered the trumpeter with the little breath

O'Grady left him.

Scatterbrain, seeing O'Grady's fury, and fearful of its silent. what the man said might be true. O'Grady said he that Dick, according to promise, had abstracted the now only lying to save himself from punishment; furthermore, swearing that if he did not play that minute he'd throw him into the ditch.

With great difficulty O'Grady was prevailed upon to his spectacles to wipe the glasses. give up the gripe of the trumpeter's throat; and the , poor breathless wretch, handing the instrument to the clarionet-player, appealed to him if it were possible to play on it. The clarionet-player said he could not tell, ·for he did not understand the trumpet.

"You see there!" cried O'Grady. "You see he's asked what was the matter. humbugging, and the clarionet-player is an honest man." "An honest man!" exclaimed the trumpeter, turning flercely on the clarionet-player. "He's the biggest villain unhanged for sthrivin' to get me murthered, and refusin' the evidence for me!" The man's eyes flashed fury as he spoke, and throwing his trumpet down, "Mooney!-by jabers, you're no man!" Clenching his fist as he spoke, he made a rush on the clarionet-player, and planted a hit on his mouth with such vigor, that he rolled in the dust; and when he rose, it was with such an upper lip that his clarionet-playing was roarious cheers, and "O'Grady for ever!" made the evidently finished for the next week certainly.

Now the fifer was the clarionet-player's brother; and he, turning on the trumpeter, roared: "Bad luck to you!-you did not sthrek him fair!"

blow, he let fly under the ear of the trumpeter, who conviction—the conviction—" was quite unprepared for it, and he, too, measured his length on the road. On recovering his legs he rushed sishin?" said the voice in the crowd. on the fifer for revenge, and a regular scuille ensued whisky that a fight was just the thing to their taste.

In vain O'Grady swore at them, and went amongst them, striving to restore order, but they would not be looking toward the quarter whence the interruption quiet till several black eyes and damaged noses bore took place-"and if there is any blackguard here who evidence of a busy five minutes having passed. In the dares to interrupt me, I'll order him to be taken out by course of "the scrimmage," Fate was unkind to the fifer, whose mouth-piece was considerably impaired; Honorable Sackville Scatterbrain, from the conviction and "the boys" remarked that the worst stick you that there is a necessity in this county-" could have in a crowd was a "whistling stick," by which name they designated the fifer's instrument.

At last, however, peace was restored, and the trumpeter again ordered to play by O'Grady.

He protested, again, it was impossible. The tifer, in revenge, declared he was only humbug- whose merriment rose O'Grady's "ill-humor.

ging the Squire.

Hereupon O'Grady, seizing the unfortunate trumpeter, gave him a more sublime kicking than ever fell to the lot of even piper or fiddler, whose pay* is proverbially oftener in that article than the coin of the | "Who made the new road?" was a question that now realm. Having tired himself, and considerably rubbed down the toe of his boot with his gentlemanly exercise, O'Grady dragged the trumpeter to the ditch, and rolled him into it, there to cool the fever which burned in his seat of honor.

O'Grady then re-entered the carriage with Scatterbrain, and the party proceeded; but the clarionetplayer could not blow a note; the fifer was not in good drummer was obliged now and then to relax his efforts death. in making a noise that he might lift his right arm to his nose, which had got damaged in the fray, and the process of wiping his face with his cuff changed the which sometimes shake public meetings in Ireland; and white facings of his jacket to red. The negro cymbal- O'Grady grew furious. player was the only one whose damages were not to be ascertained, as a black eye would not tell on him, and his lips could not be more swollen than nature had made them. On the procession went, however; but the rival mob, the Eganites, profiting by the delay caused by the row, got ahead, and entered the town first, with | the laugh against him. their pipers and fiddlers, hurrahing their way in good in the court-house before the arrival of the opposite to interrupt him. party, whose band, instead of being a source of Eganites, who received them with mockery and laugh- terms, the truth of such an assertion." ter. All this by no means sweetened O'Grady's temper, who looked thunder as he entered the court-house with his candidate, who was, though a good-humored "Stop your banging there, you ruflians, and let me be fellow, a little put out by the accidents of the morning;

The business of the day was opened by the highsheriff, and Major Dawson lost no time in rising to propose, that Edward Egan, Esquire, of Merryvale, was a "By the hokey, I'll murder some o' ye!" shouted the fit and proper person to represent the county in parlia- sertion."

> The proposition was received with cheers by "the boys" in the body of the court-house; the Major proceeded, full sail, in his speech-his course aided by being on the popular current, and the "sweet voices" of forward and to the point, a voice in the crowd pro-

"And now," said the Major, "I will read a few extracts here from some documents, in support of what I have had the honor of addressing to you." And he angry at being twitted by Dick. pulled out a bundle of papers as he spoke, and laid them down before him.

"Yes, there's music in it; and if you don't blow it out ' The movement was not favored by "the boys," as it indicated a tedious reference to facts by no means to their taste, and the same voice that suggested the three cheers, now sung out:

followed by murmurs, coughs, and sneezes, in the like you-I'll kick eight Furlongs one mile." crowd, with a considerable shuffling of hobnailed shoes on the pavement. "Order!" cried a voice in authority.

the crowd. "Whisky!" cried one.

"Porther!" cried another. "Tabakky!" roared a third.

"I must insist on silence!" cried the sheriff, in a very cleared."

better," said the wag in the crowd.

consequences, had alighted from the carriage and come | The Major all this time had been adjusting his specto the rescue, suggesting to the infuriated squire that tacles on his nose, unconscious, poor old gentleman, knew better, that the blackguard was a notorious joker, | glasses from them that morning. He took up his docu- county." and having indulged in a jest in the first instance, was ments to read, made sundry wry faces, turned the that-but could make out nothing; while Dick gave a | of "Go home, turncoat!" knowing wink at Murphy. The old gentleman took off

The voice in the crowd cried, "Thank you, Major." The Major pulled out his handkerchief, and his fingers met where he expected to find a lens:-he looked very angry, cast a suspicious glance at Dick, who met it with the composure of an anchorite, and quietly solid respect as well as affection of the county.

"I shall not trouble you, gentlemen, with the extracts," said the Major.

"Hear, hear," responded the genteel part of the auditory. "I tould you we'd take your word, Major," cried the voice in the crowd. Egan's seconder followed the Major, and the crowd shouted again. O'Grady now came forward to propose the Honorable Sackville Scatterbrain, as a fit and proper person to represent the county in parliament. He was received by his own set of vagabonds with upwalls ring. "Egan for ever!" and hurras, were returned from the Merryvalians. O'Grady thus commenced his address: "In coming forward to support my honorable friend, But while in the very act of reprobating the foul the Honorable Sackville Scatterbrain, it is from the right!"

"Who got the conviction agen the potteen last

Loud groans followed this allusion to the prosecution among "the musicians," to the great delight of the of a few little private stills, in which O'Grady had crowd of retainers, who were so well primed with shown some unnecessary severity that made him uppopular. Cries of "Order!" and "Silence!" ensued.

"I say the conviction," repeated O'Grady, flercely, gallery. the ears. I say, I propose my honorable friend, the "Faith, there is plenty of necessity," said the tormenter in the crowd.

"Take that man out," said the sheriff.

"Don't hurry yourself, sir," returned the delinquent, represent this county in parliament, and support the considerably contributed. laws, the constitution, the crown, and the-the-interests of the country!"

arose from the crowd-a laugh followed-and some of O'Grady, who got a grand jury presentment to make out a line for himself," etc., etc., etc. a road which served nobody's interest but his own.

lawless and disaffected show too plainly that we stand purging the country."

"Who killed the 'pothecary?" said a fellow, in a voice playing condition, and tooted with some difficulty; the so deep as seemed fit only to issue from the jaws of

The question, and the extraordinary voice in which it was uttered, produced one of those roars of laughter

"If I knew who that gentleman was, I'd pay him!"

said he. "You'd better pay them you know," was the answer; and this allusion to O'Grady's notorious character of a bad payer was relished by the crowd, and again raised

"Sir," said O'Grady, addressing the sheriff, "I hold ruffianism in contempt. I treat it, and the authors of God forbid I were of the mongrel breed of Irishmen it, those who no doubt have instructed them, with con- who speak iil of their own country. I never did it, tempt." He looked over to where Egan and his friends boys, and I never will! Some think they get on by it.

a grin of vexation on his phiz, meant to express some- humor down the street, and occupying the best places stood, as he spoke of the crowd having had instruction

"If you mean, sir," said Egan, "that I have given triumph, was only a thing of jeering merriment to the any such instructions, I deny, in the most unqualified

"Keep yourself cool, Ned," said Dick Dawson, close to his ear. "Never fear me," said Egan; "but I won't let him

The two former friends now exchanged rather fierce looks at each other. "Then why am I interrupted?" asked O'Grady.

"It is no business of mine to answer that," replied Egan; "but I repeat the unqualified denial of your as-

The crowd ceased its noise when the two Squires were seen engaged in exchanging smart words, in the hopes of catching what they said.

"It is a disgraceful uproar," said the sheriff. "Then it is your business, Mister Sheriff," returned Egan, "to suppress it-not mine; they are quiet enough

"Yes, but they'll make a wow again," said Furlong, "when Miste' O'Gwady begins."

you have instructed them." "No, sir, I didn't instwuct them," said Furlong, very Dick laughed in his face, and said, "Maybe that's

"You seem to know all about it," said Dick; "maybe some of your electioneering tactics-ch?" Furlong got very angry, while Dick and Murphy shouted with laughter at him. "No, sir," said Furlong, "I don't welish the pwactice of such di'ty twicks." "Do you apply the word 'dirty' to me, sir?" said "Never mind, Major-sure we'll take your word for Dick the Devil, ruffling up like a game-cock. "I'll tell you what, sir, if you make use of the word 'dirty' Cries of "Order!" and "Silence!" ensued; and were again, I'd think very little of kicking you-ay, or eight

"Who's talking of kicking?" asked O'Grady.

"I am," said Dick, "do you want any?" "Gentlemen! gentlemen!" cried the sheriff, "order! "Order anything you plaze, sir!" said the voice in pray order! do proceed with the business of the day." "I'll talk to you after about this!" said O'Grady, in a threatening tone. "Very well," said Dick; "we've time enough, the day's young yet." O'Grady then proceeded to find fault with Egan, censuring his politics, and endeavoring to justify his defection from the same cause. He concluded thus: "Faith, if you cleared your own throat it would be "Sir, I shall pursue my course of duty; I have chalked out my own line of conduct, sir, and I am convinced no A laugh followed. The sheriff felt the hit, and was other line is the right line. Our opponents are wrong, sir-totally wrong-all wrong; and, as I have said, I have chalked out my own hne, sir, and I propose the Honorable Sackville Seatterbrain as a fit and proper person to sit in parliament for the representation of this

The O'Gradyites shouted as their chief concluded; papers up to the light,-now on this side, and now on and the Merryvalians returned some grouns, and a cry

Egan now presented himself, and was received with deafening and long-continued cheers, for he was really beloved by the people at large; his frank and easy nature, the amiable character he bore in all his social relations, the merciful and conciliatory tendency of his decisions and conduct as a magistrate, won him the

He had been for some days in low spirits in consequence of Larry Hogan's visit and mysterious communication with him; but this, its cause, was unknown to all but himself, and therefore more difficult to support; for none but those whom sad experience has taught can tell the agony of enduring in secret and in silence the pang that guaws a proud heart, which, Spartan like, will let the tooth destroy, without complaint or murmur.

His depression, however, was apparent, and Dick told Murphy he feared Ned would not be up to the mark at the election; but Murphy, with a better knowledge of human nature, and the excitement of such a cause, said, "Never fear him—ambition is a long spur, my boy, and will stir the blood of a thicker-skinned fellow than your brother-in-law. When he comes to stand up and assert his claims before the world, he'll be all Murphy was a true prophet, for Egan presented himself with confidence, brightness, and good humor on his open countenance.

"The first thing I have to ask of you, boys," said Egan, addressing the assembled throng, "is a fair hearing for the other candidate." "Hear, hear," followed from the gentlemen in the

"And, as he's a stranger among us, let him have the privilege of first addressing you.

With these words he bowed courteously to Scatterbrain, who thanked him very much like a gentleman, and accepting his offer, advanced to address the electors. O'Grady waved his hand in signal to his bodyguard, and Scatterbrain had three cheers from the rag-amuffins.

He was no great things of a speaker, but he was a good-humored fellow, and this won on the Paddies; amidst the laughter of "the boys," in proportion to and although coming before them under the disadvantage of being proposed by O'Grady, they heard him "I say there is a necessity for a vigorous member to with good temper-to this, however, Egun's good word

He went very much over the ground his proposer had taken, so that, bating the bad temper, the pith of his speech was much the same, quite as much deprecating the political views of his opponent, and harping on groans at this allusion to a bit of jobbing on the part 'O'Grady's worn-out catch-word of "Having chalked

Egan now stood forward, and was greeted with fresh "The frequent interruptions I meet here from the cheers. He began in a very Irish fashion; for, being an unaffected, frank, and free-hearted fellow himself, in need of men who will support the arm of the law in he knew how to touch the feelings of those who possess such qualities. He waited till the last echo of the up roarious greeting died away, and the first simple words he uttered were:

"Here I am, boys!" Simple as these words were, they produced "one cheer more." "Here I am, boys-the same I ever was."

Loud huzzas and "Long life to you!" answered the last pithy words, which were sore ones to O'Grady, who, as a renegade, felt the hit.

"Fellow-countrymen, I come forward to represent you, and, however I may be unequal to that task, at least I will never misrepresent you.'

Another cheer followed.

"My past life is evidence enough on that point;

^{*} Fiddler's fare, or piper's pay-more kicks than half-Deuce.

and so they do, indeed; they get on as sweeps and shoe-blacks get on-they drive a dirty trade and find employment; but are they respected?" Shouts of "Not-not"

"You're right! -No!-they are not respected-even our chimneys or cleans our shoes. The honorable gen- a moment." tleman who has addressed you last confesses he is a pleasing duty-but he is not the man to whom you would give your confidence. You might share a hearty glass with a stranger, but you would not enter into a joint lease of a farm without knowing a little more of stranger, will you give a whole county into his hands? level. When a stranger comes to these parts, I'm sure he'll get a civil answer from every man I see here—he will was going to blaze at him, fired hastily, and missed his get a civil 'yes' or a civil 'no' to his questions; and if be seeks his way, you will show him his road. As to the honorable gentleman who has done you the favor to come and ask you civilly, will you give him the tricked him, but Scatterbrain felt the propriety of county, you as civilly may answer 'No,' and show him his road home again. ('So we will.') As for the gentleman who proposed him, he has chosen to make certain strictures upon my views, and opinions, and conduct. As for views—there was a certain heathen god the Romans worshiped, called Janus; he was a fellow with two heads-and by-the-by, boys, he would have been just the fellow to live among us; for when one of his heads was broken he would have had the other for use. Well, this Janus was called 'double-face,' and could see before and behind him. Now, I'm no double-face, boys; and as for seeing before and behind me, I can look back on the past and forward to the future, and both the roads are straight ones. (Cheers.) I wish every one could say as much. As for my opinions, all I shall say and all variety of manner, group, and costume, some and while he defeated, amused them. Furlong, after is, I never changed mine; Mr. O'Grady can't say as on foot, some on horseback, and some on cars; the gay-voice in the crowd,

A loud laugh followed this sally, for the old dowager's eccentricity was not quite a secret. O'Grady looked as if he could have eaten the whole crowd at a mouthful.

"Much has been said," continued Egan, "about gentlemen chalking out lines for themselves; now, the plain English of this determined chalking of their own line is rubbing out every other man's line. (Bravo.) Some of these chalking gentlemen have lines chalked up against them, and might find it difficult to pay the score if they were called to account. To such, rubbing out other men's lines, and their own, too, may be convenient; but I don't like the practice. Boys, I have no more to say than this, We know and can trust each other!"

Egan's address was received with acclamation, and when silence was restored, the sheriff demanded a show of hands; and a very fine show of hands there was, and every hand had a stick in it.

Scatterbrain, after which every one began to move branches of hazel, which, bent above the car in the rom the court-house.

O'Grady, in very ill-humor, was endeavoring to shove awning, and served for protection against the weather; past a herculean fellow, rather ragged and very saucy, who did not seem inclined to give place to the savage elbowing of the Squire.

"What brings such a ragged rascal as you here?" said O'Grady, brutally; "you're not an elector."

"Yis, I am!" replied the fellow, sturdily. "Why, you can't have a lease, you beggar."

"No, but maybe I have an article." * "What is your article?"

"What is it?" reforted the fellow, with a fierce look at O'Grady. "Faith, it's a fine brass blunderbuss; and I'd like to see the man would dispute the title."

O'Grady had met his master, and could not reply; the crowd shouted for the ragamufan, and all parties separated, to gird up their loins for the next day's

CHAPTER XIX. elections in all places, the certainty of a hostile meet- the lilting of pipes increased the mingled din. ing must have been apparent. The sheriff might have put the gentlemen under arrest, it is true, but that officer was a weak, thoughtless, irresolute person, and took no such precaution; though, to do the poor man justice, it is only fair to say that such an intervention of authority at such a time and place would be considered on all hands as a very impertment, unjustifiable, and discourteous interference with the private pleasures and privileges of gentlemen.

O'Grady, requesting the honor of his company the next morning to "grass before breakfast!" to which, of course, Dick returned an answer expressive of the utmost readiness to oblige the Squire with his presence; and, as the business of the election was of importance, it was agreed they should meet at a given spot on the way to the town, and so lose as little time as posrible.

The next morning, accordingly, the parties met at | breath of political excitement? the appointed place, Dick attended by Edward O'Confriend; and O'Grady, with Scatterbrain for his second, and Furlong a looker-on; there were some straggling spectators besides, to witness the affair.

"O'Grady looks savage, Dick," said Edward. "Yes," answered Dick, with a smile of as much unconcern as if he were going to lead off a country dance. "He looks as pleasant as a bull in a pound."

"Take care of yourself, my dear Dick," said Edward, seriously.

"My dear boy, don't make yourself uneasy," replied Dick, laughing. "I'll bet you two to one he misses -but being heard is not essential to the applause file, 11

Edward made no reply, but, to his sensitive and more thoughtful nature, betting at such a moment savored too much of levity, so, leaving his friend, he advanced to Scatterbrain, and they commenced making the pre- might say, "Let me see the speech-maker, an' I'll tell and vexation around him. It was just a dish to his taste liminary preparations.

During the period which this required, O'Grady was looking down sulkily or looking up flercely, and striking his heel with vehemence into the sod, while Dick Daw- be opened, they cheered accordingly when he con- long ago." Oh! could be have only known at that son was whistting a planxty and eying his man.

* A name given to a written engagement between landlord and teamit, promising to grant a lease, on which regis ration is allowed in Ireland.

on their ground, and Dick saw by the intent look with tempting to frown down their dissatisfaction, he began which O'Grady marked him, that he meant mischief; to speak; but he had not uttered six words when his they were handed their pistols, the seconds retired, the word was given, and as O'Grady raised his pistol, by their very employers. Your political sweep and Dick saw he was completely covered, and suddenly exshoe-black is no more respected than he who cleans claimed, throwing up his arm, "I beg your pardon for mranger among you; and is he, a stranger, to be your ing Dick standing perfectly erect, and nothing followrepresentative? You may be civil to a stranger-it is a ing his sudden request for this suspension of hostilities asked, in a very angry tone, why he had interrupted him. "Because I saw you had me covered," said Dick, "and you'd have hit me if you had fired that time; now fire away as soon as you like!" added he, at the same him; and if you would not trust a single farm with a moment rapidly bringing up his own pistol to the auditors put their hands to their ears. Thus armed, he adversary. Dick made him a low bow, and fired in the air.

O'Grady was taken by surprise, and fancying Dick

O'Grady wanted another shot, saying Dawson had Edward O'Connor's objection to further fighting, after nated.

O'Grady, having fully intended to pink Dick, was ex-neatly?"

merry and cheering salutations with the electors, who with the utmost cheerfulness, and gave his opponents were thronging toward the town in great numbers a laugh in exchange for the point gained against them, est show of holiday attire contrasting with the every-"Sure there's a weathercock in the family," said the | day rags of wretchedness; the fresh cheek of health and beauty making gaunt misery look more appalling, and the elastic step of vigorous youth outstripping the tardy pace of feeble age. Pedestrians were hurrying on in detachments of five or six—the equestrians in companies less numerous; sometimes the cavalier who could boast a saddle carrying a woman on a pillion behind him. But saddle or pillion were not an indispensible accompaniment to this equestrian duo, for many a "bareback" garran carried his couple, his only harness being a halter made of hay-rope, which in time of need sometimes proves a substitute for "rack and manger," for it is not uncommon in Ireland to see the garran nibbling at the end of his bridle when opportunity offers. The cars were in great variety; some bore small kishes,* in which a woman and some children might be seen; others had a shakedown of clean added he to the clerk, straw to serve for cushions; while the better sort spread a feather-bed for greater comfort, covered by a patchwork quilt, the work of the "good woman" herself, whose own quilted petticoat vied in brightness The show of hands was declared to be in favor of with the calico roses on which she was sitting. The Egan, whereupon a poll was demanded on the part of most luxurious indulged still further in some arched fashion of a booth, bore another coverlid, by way of but few there were who could indulge in such a luxury as this of the "chaise marine," which is the name the contrivance bears, but why, Heaven only knows.

The street of the town had its center occupied at the said Murphy. broadest place with a long row of cars, covered in a similar manner to the chaise marine, a door or shutter laid across underneath the awning, after the fashion of a counter, on which various articles were displayed for sale; for the occasion of the election was as good as a fair to the small dealers, and the public were therefore favored with the usual opportunity of purchasing uneatable gingerbread, knives that would not cut, spec-usefulness. While the dealers here displayed their ware, and were vociferous in declaring its excellence, noisy groups agents, amidst the laughter of the bystanders, whose passed up and down on either side of these ambulatory merriment was increased by Furlong's vehement as AFTER the angry words exchanged at the nomination, | shops, discussing the merits of the candidates, predict- surances he did not mean to vote as Murphy wanted to the most peaceable reader must have anticipated the ing the result of the election, or giving an occasional make it appear he had; but the more he protested, the probability of a duel; but when the inflammable stuff of cheer for their respective parties, with the twirl of a more the people laughed. This increased his energy in which Irishmon are made is considered, together with stick or the throwing up of a hat; while from the houses fighting out the point, until Scatterbrain's agent rethe excitement and pugnacious spirit attendant upon on both sides of the street the scraping of fiddles and commended him to desist, for that he was only inter-

> in front of the inn where Scatterbrain's committee sat, sessor about that vote." and before the house of Murphy, who gave up all his establishment to the service of the election, and whose yote is as dead as a herring to you." stable-yard made a capital place of mustering for the Furlong, finding further remonstrance unavailing as with rival banners flying, they joined in one common stream, rushing to give their votes-for as for their infaute. roices, they were giving them most liberally and strenuheavings of this living mass resembled a turbulent sea side-O'Grady and Furlong, Dick Dawson and Tom catcher." Durfy for work, and Growling to laugh at them all. Edward O'Connor was addressing the populace in a spirit- one. stirring appeal to their pride and affections, stimulating them to support their tried and trusty friend, and not yield the honor of their county either to fears or favors of a stranger, nor copy the bad example stentorian voice amidst the multitude, who shouted which some (who ought to blush) had set them, of with laughter at the apt rejoinder, which they reiterbetraying old friends and abandoning old principles. ated from one end of the crowd to the other, and the Edward's address was cheered by those who heard it ery of "threasury bacon" rung far and wide. attendant on political addresses, for those who do not hustings what was to be done, while Dick the Devil hear cheer quite as much as those who do. The old was throwing jokes to the crowd, and inflaming their adage hath it, "Show me your company, and I'll tell mischievous merriment, and Growling looking on with you who you are;" and in the spirit of the adage one an expression of internal delight at the fun, uproar, you what he says." So, when Ned O'Connor spoke, the and he devoured it with silent satisfaction. boys welcomed him with a shout of "Ned of the Hill forever!" and knowing to what tune his mouth would O'Grady to Scatterbrain. "He should have returned cluded. O'Grady, on evincing a desire to address them, was not so successful; the moment he showed

* A large basket of coarse wicker-work, used mostly for carrying turf-Anglice, peat.

The arrangements were soon made, the men placed | himself, taunts were flung at him; but spite of this, atvoice was drowned in the discordant yells of a trum pet. It is scarcely necessary to tell the reader that the performer was the identical trumpeter of the preceding day, whom O'Grady had kicked so unmercifully, who, in indignation at his wrongs, had gone over to the O'Grady involuntarily lowered his weapon, and see- enemy; and having, after a night's hard work, disengaged the cork which Andy had crammed into his trumpet, appeared in the crowd, ready to do battle in the popular cause-" Wait," he cried, "till that savage baste of a Squire dares for to go for to spake!-won't I smother him!" Then he would put his instrument of vengeance to his lips, and produce a yell that made his waited near the platform for O'Grady's speech, and put his threat effectually into execution. O'Grady saw whence the annoyance proceeded, and shook his fist at the delinquent, with protestations that the police should drag him from the crowd, if he dared to continue; but every threat was blighted in the bud by the withering blast of a trumpet, which was regularly followed by a peal of laughter from the crowd. O'Grady Dawson receiving O'Grady's fire; so the gentlemen | stamped and swore with rage, and calling Furlong. were removed from the ground and the affair termi- sent him to inform the sheriff how riotous the crowd were, and requested him to have the trumpeter seized.

Furlong hurried off on his mission, and after a long cessively savage at being overreached, and went off to search for the potential functionary, saw him in a disthe election with a temper by no means sweetened by tant corner, engaged in what appeared to be an urgent the morning's adventure, while Dick roared with discussion between him and Murtough Murphy, who laughing, exclaiming at intervals to Edward O'Connor, was talking in the most jocular manner to the sheriff, as he was putting up his pistols, "Did not I do him who seemed anything but amused with his argumentative merriment. The fact was, Murphy, while pushing the Off they cantered gayly to the high road, exchanging interests of Egan, with an energy unsurpassed, did it shoving and elbowing his way through the crowd, suffering from heat and exertion, came fussing up to the sheriff, wiping his face with a scented cambric mockethandkerchief. The sheriff and Murphy were standing close beside one of the polling-desks, and on Furlong's lisping out "Miste' Shewiff," Murphy recognizing the voice and manner, turned suddenly round, and with the most provoking cordiality addressed him thus. with a smile and a nod:

"Ah! Mister Furlong, how d'ye do?-delighted to see you; here we are at it, sir, hammer and tongs-of course you are come to vote for Egan?"

Furlong, who intended to annihilate Murphy with an indignant repetition of the provoking question put to him, threw as much of defiance as he could in his namby-paniby manner, and exclaimed: "I vote for Egan!"

"Thank you, sir," said Murphy. "Record the vote,"

There was loud laughter on one side, and anger as loud on the other, at the way in which Murphy had entrapped Furlong, and cheated him into voting against his own party. In vain the poor gull protested he never meant to vote for Egan.

"But you did it," cried Murphy. "What the deuce have you done?" cried Scatterbrains' agent, in a rage.

"Of course they know I wouldn't vote that way." said Furlong. "I couldn't vote that way-it's a mistake, and I pwotest against the twick."

"We've got the trick, and we'll keep it, however."

Scatterbrain's agent said 'twas unfair, and desired the polling-clerk not to record the vote. "Didn't every one hear him say, 'I vote for Egan?"

asked Murphy. "But he didn't mean it, sir," said the agent.

"I don't care what he meant, but I know he said it." retorted Murphy; "and every one round knows he said it; and as I mean what I say myself, I suppose tacles to increase blindness, and other articles of equal every other gentleman does the same-down with the vote, Mister Polling-clerk."

A regular wrangle now took place between the two rupting their own voters from coming up. " Never But the crowd was thickest and the uproar greatest mind now, sir," said the agent; "I'll appeal to the as-

"Appeal as much as you like," said Murtough; "that tallies of Egan's electors to assemble ere they marched regarded his vote, delivered to the sheriff the message to the poll. At last the hour for opening the poll of O'Grady, who was boiling over with impatience, in struck, the inn poured forth the Scatterbrains, and the meantime, at the delay of his messenger, and anx-Murphy's stable-yard the Eganites, the two bodies of jously expecting the arrival of the sheriff and police to Dick Dawson had a message conveyed to him from electors uttering thundering shouts of defiance, as, coerce the villanous trumpeter and chastise the applauding crowd, which became worse and worse every

They exhibited a new source of provocation to ously already. The dense crowd soon surrounded the O'Grady, by exposing a rat-trap hung at the end of a hustings in front of the court-house, and the throes and pole, with the caged vermin within, and vociferated Rat, rat," in the pauses of the trumpet. Scatterbrain. lashed by a tempest:-but what sea is more unruly remembering the hearing they gave him the previous than an excited crowd?-what tempest fiercer than the day, hoped to silence them, and begged O'Grady to permit him to address them; but the whim of the mob Conspicuous among those on the hustings were both was up, and could not be easily diverted, and Scatter aor and Egan - the former in the capacity of his the candidates, and their aiders and abettors on either brain himself was hailed with the name of "Rat-

"You cotch him-and I wish you joy of him!" cried

"How much did you give for him?" shouted another. "What did you bait your thrap with?" roared a third. "A bit o' threasury bacon," was the answer from a

Scatterbrain and O'Grady consulted together on the

"What the deuce keeps that sneaking dandy?" cried moment, that his sweet son-in-law-elect was voting against them, what would have been the consequence? Another exhibition, insulting to O'Grady, now appeared in the crowd-a chimney-pot and weathercock, after the fashion of his mother's, was stuck on a pole, and underneath was suspended an old coat, turned in ide out; this double indication of his change, so pecuharly insulting, was elevated before the hustings, amidst the jeers and laughter of the people. O'Grady was rearly frantic-he rushed to the front of the platform, ne shook his fist at the mockery, poured every abusive cpithet on its perpetrators, and swore he would head the police himself and clear the crowd. In reply, the crowd hooted, the rap-trap and weathercock were stanced together after the fashion of Punch and Judy, to the music of the trumpet; and another pole made is appearance, with a piece of bacon on it, and a as a jack-a-dandy acquirement. relacard bearing the inscription of "Treasury bacon," all which Tom Durfy had run off to procure at a huck-: der's shop the moment he heard the waggish answer, 7 high he thus turned to account.

"The military must be called out!" said O'Grady; and with these words he left the platform to seek the : heriff.

Edward O'Connor, the moment he heard O'Grady's them. threat, quitted the hustings also, in company with old Growling. "What a savage and dangerous temper that man has!" said Edward; "calling for the military when the people have committed no outrage to require such deri gence,"

"They have poked up the bear with their poles, sir, and it is likely he'll give them a hug before he's done with them," answered the doctor.

"But what need of military?" indignantly exclaimed Edward. "The people are only going on with the noise and disturbance common to any election, and the chances are, that savage man may influence the sheriff to provoke the people, by the presence of soldiers, to think you wouldn't turn up your nose at bacon and come act which would not have taken place but for greens," beir interference; and thus they themselves originate chastise. In England such extreme measures are never greens, my boy; so, start!-vanish!-disperse!-my had the command of the party. resorted to until necessity compels them. How I have | bacon-merchant. envied Englishmen, when, on the occasion of assizes, every soldier is marched from the town while the judge is sitting; in Ireland the place of trial bristles with ! ayonets! How much more must a people respect and ove the laws, whose own purity and justice are their test safeguard-whose inherent majesty is sufficient or their own protection! The sword of justice should ever need the assistance of the swords of dragoons; and in the election of their representatives, as well as at judicial sittings, a people should be free from military Gespotism."

"But, as an historian, my dear young friend," said the doctor, "I need not remind you, that dragoons ivave been considered good lookers-on in Ireland

"ince the days of Strafford."

"Ay!" said Edward; "and scandalous it is, that the t buses of the seventeenth century should be perpetuated in the nineteenth.* While those who govern show, by the means they adopt for supporting their authory, that their rule requires undue force to uphold it, iney tacitly teach resistance to the people, and their ractices imply that the resistance is righteous."

"My dear Master Ned," said the doctor, "you're patriot, and I'm sorry for you: you inherit the free pinions of your namesake 'of the hill,' of blessed nemory; with such sentiments you may make a very good Irish barrister, but you'll never be an Irish judge -and as for a silk gown, faith you may leave the wear-It of that to your wife, for stuff is all that will ever : Jorn your shoulders."

"Well, I would rather have stuff there than in my !:ead," answered Edward.

"Very epigrammatic, indeed, Master Ned," said the coctor. "Let us make a distich of it," added he, with . chuckle; "for, of a verity, some of the K.C's of our times are but dunces. Let's see-how will it go?"

Edward dashed off this couplet in a moment: "Of modern king's counsel this truth may be said, They have silk on their shoulders, and stuff in their head." "Neat enough," said the doctor; "but you might contrive more sting in it—something to the tune of the i npossibility of making 'a silk purse out of a sow's car, but the facility of manufacturing silk gowns out of bores' heads."

"That's out of your bitter pill-box, doctor," said fled, smiling.

"Put it into your rhyme, Ned-and set it to musicand dedicate it to the har mess, and see how you'll rise a your profession! Good-by-I will be back again to use the fun as soon as I can, but I must go now and visit an old woman who is in doubt whether she stands nost in need of me or the priest. It is wonderful how title people think of the other world till they are going to leave this; and then with all their praises of heaven. now very anxious they are to stay out of it as long as 'hey can."

With this bit of characteristic sareasm, the doctor crowd.

and Edward separated.

Edward had hardly left the hustings, when Murphy furried on the platform and asked for him. "He left a few minutes ago," said Tom Durfy. "Well, I dare say he is doing good, wherever he is," mid Murtough; "I wanted to speak to him, but when ne comes back send him to me. In the meantime, Com, run down and bring up a batch of voters-we're cetting a little ahead, I think, with the bothering I'm . iving them up there, and now I want to push them with good strong tallies—run down to the yard like a good fellow, and march them up." Off posted Tom Durfy on his mission, and Murphy reurned to the court-house.

Tom, on reaching Murphy's house, found a strange posse of O'Grady's party hanging round the place, and me of the fellows had backed a car against the yard ate which opened on the street, and was the outlet or Egan's voters. By way of excuse for this, the car was piled with cabbages for sale, and a couple of ery unruly pigs were tethered to the shafts, and the trapping fellow who owned all kept guard over them, c'om immediately told him he should leave that place, and an altercation commenced; but even an electionering dispute could not but savor of fun and repartee between Paddies.

"Be off!" said Tom. "Sure I can't be off till the market's over," was the answering, at once, are you a Roman Catholicr" Chiawer.

"Well, you must take your car out o' this." "Indeed now, you'll let me stay, Mr. Durfy."

"Indeed I won't."

"Arrah! what harm?"

robbery of Connaught was put in practice, not being words and cruked questions at me, and I gev you anouite certain of his juries, he writes that he will send three hundred horse to the province during the proseedings, as "good lookers-on."

"Sure your honor wouldn't spile my stand!" "Faith, I'll spoil more than your stand, if you don't leave that." " No finer cabbage in the world."

"Go out o' that now, 'while your shoes are good,' " said Tom, seeing he had none; for in speaking of shoes, Tom had no intention of alluding to the word chour, and thus making a French pun upon the cabbage-for Tom did not understand French, but rather despised it

"Sure you wouldn't ruin my market, Misther Durfy." "None of your humbugging-but be off at once," said Tom, whose tone indicated he was very much in earnest. "Not a nicer slip of a pig in the market than the same pigs-I'm expectin' thirty shillin's apiece for "Faith, you'll get more than thirty shillings," cried

Tom, "in less than thirty seconds, if you don't take your dirty cabbage and blackguard pigs out o' that!" "Dirty cabbages!" cried the fellow, in a tone of surprise. The order to depart was renewed.

"Blackguard pigs!" cried Paddy, in affected wonder. "Ah, Masther Tom, one would think it was afther dinner you wor,"

"What do you mean, you rap?-do you intend to say Im drunk?"

"Oh, no, sir! But if it's not afther dinner wid you, I

"Oh, with all your joking," said Tom, laughing, "you

While this dialogue was going forward, several cars | place, I'd soon disperse the raseals." were gathered round the place, with a seeming view to hem in Egan's voters, and interrupt their progress to inquired the onicer. the poll; but the gate of the yard suddenly opened, and the fellows within soon upset the car which impeded know pretty well what it is. their egress, gave freedom to the pigs, who used their liberty in eating the cabbages, while their owner was or I am willing to believe you would not talk so lightly making cause with his party of O'Gradyites against of it; but it is singular how much fonder civilians are the outbreak of Egan's men. The affair was not one of urging measures that end in blood, than those whose of importance; the numbers were not sufficient to con- profession is arms, and who know how disastrous is stitute a good row—it was but a hustling affair after their use." all, and a slight scrimmage enabled Tom Durfy to head his men in a rush to the poll, facilitating their own, and retarding their opponents'

progress were resorted to.

Scatterbrain's party, to counteract the energetic movement of the enemy's voters and Murphy's activity, got up a mode of interruption seldom made use of, but of which they availed themselves on the present occasion. It was determined to put the oath of allegiance to all the Roman Catholics, by which some loss of | teeth chattering with fear, he exclaimed:

time to the Eganite party was effected.

This gave rise to odd scenes and answers, occasion- tate: besides, I haven't read the Riot Act." ally:-some of the fellows did not know what the oath of allegiance meant; some did not know whether there | the captain. might not be a scruple of conscience against making it; mode of address, on the part of the person who said to them, in a tone savoring of supremacy-" You're a Roman Catholic?"-would not answer immediately, and gave dogged looks, and sometimes dogged answers; sir-besides, the Riot Act-haven't it about me-must and it required address on the part of Egan's agents | be read, you know, Mister O'Grady." to make them overcome such feelings, and expedite the work of voting. At last the same hercutean fellow who gave O'Grady the flerce answer about the blunderbuss tenure he enjoyed, came up to vote, and fairly sir, imless the Riot Act was read, and the thing done bothered the querist with his ready replies, which, purposely, were never to the purpose. The examination button, sir-only the regularity, you know; and the ran nearly thus:

"You're a Roman Catholic?"

"Am I?" said the fellow.

"Are you not?" demanded the agent. "You say I am," was the answer.

"Come, sir, answer-What's your religion?"

"The thrue religion." "What religion is that?"

"My religion."

"And what's your religion?" " My mother's religion."

"And what was your mother's religion?"

"She tuk whisky in her lay."

"Come, now, I'll find you out, as cunning as you are," said the agent, piqued into an encounter of wits with this fellow, whose battling of every question pleased the

"You bless yourself, don't you?" "When I'm done with, I think I ought."

"What place of worship do you go to?" "The most convayment."

"But of what persuasion are you?"

"My persuasion is that you won't find it out. '

"What is your belief?"

"My belief is that you're puzzled."
"Do you confess?"

"Not to you."

"Come! now I have you. Who would you send for if you were likely to die?" "Doctor Growlin'."

"Not for the priest?"

"I must first get a messenger."

"Confound your quibbling!-tell me, then, what your opinions are—your conscientious opinions, I mean, " "They are the same as my landlord's."

"And what are your landlord's opinious?"

"Faix, his opinion is, that I won't pay him the last half-year's rint; and I'm of the same opinion my-

A roar of laughter followed this answer, and dumbfoundered the agent for a time; but angered at the successful quibbling of the sturdy and wily fellow before him, he at last declared, with much severity of manner. that he must have a direct reply. "I insist, sir, on your

"I am," said the fellow. "And could not you say so at once?" repeated the

"You never axed me," returned the other.

"I did," said the officer. * When Strafford's infamous project of the wholesale things, but you never axed me-you wor dirivin' crass such an extremity that he should be forced, in self-deis danger in delay.

"You're stopping up the gate on purpose, and you swers to match them, for sure I thought it was manners to cut out my behavior on your patthern."

"Take the oath, sir."

"Where are I to take it to, sir?" inquired the provoking blackguard. The clerk was desired to "swear him," without further notice being taken of his impertment answer. "I hope the oath is not weighty, sir, for my conscience is tindher since the last albi I swore." The business of the interior was now suspended for a time by the sounds of fierce tunult which arose from, without. Some rushed from the court-house to the platform outside, and beheld the crowd in a state of great excitement, beating back the police, who had been engaged in endeavoring to seize the persons and things which had offended O'Grady; and the police falling back for support on a party of military which O'Grady had prevailed on the sheriff to call out. The sheriff was a weak, irresolute man, and was over-persuaded by such words as "mob" and "riot," and breaches of the peace being about to be committed, if the rullans were not cheer I beforehand. The wisdom of preventive measures was preached, and the rest of the hackneyed phrases were paraded, which brazen-faced and ironhanded oppressors are only too familiar with.

The people were now roused, and thoroughly defeated the police, who were forced to fly to the lines of the military party for protection; having effected this object, the crowd retained their position, and did not attempt to assault the soldiers, though a very firm and lowering front was presented to them, and shouts of deflance against the "Peelers" rose loud and long. "A round of ball carridge would cool their courage," said O'Grady. The English officer in command of the party, lookhe offense which they are forearmed with power to won't find me a chicken to pluck for your bacon and ing with wonder and reproach upon him, asked if he

"No, sir; the sheriff, of course; but if I were in his

"Did you ever witness the chect of a fusilade, sir?"

"No, sir," said O'Grady, gruffly; "but I suppose I

"For the sake of humanity, sir, I hope you do not,

The police were ordered to advance again and seize the "ringleaders;" they obeyed unwillingly; but being The polling was now prosecuted vigorously on both saluted with some stones, their individual wrath was sides, each party anxious to establish a majority on excited, and they advanced to chastise the mob, who the first day; and of course the usual practices for again drove them back; and a nearer approach to the soldiers was made by the crowd in the scutle which en-

> "Now, will you fire?" said O'Grady to the sheriff. The sheriff, who was a miserable coward, was filled with dread at the threatening aspect of the mob, and wished to have his precious person under shelter before hostilities commenced; so, with pallid lips, and his

"No! no! no! don't fire-don't fire-don't be precipi-

"There's no necessity for firing, I should say," said "I thought not, captain—I hope not, captain," said others, indignant at what they felt to be an insulting | the sheriff, who now assumed a humano tone. "Think of the effusion of blood, my dear sir," said he to

O'Grady, who was grinning like a field all the time-

"the sacrifice of human life-I couldn't, sir-I can't,

"Not always," said O'Grady, fiercely. "But the inquiry is always very strict after, if it is not, sir-1 should not like the effusion of human blood, regularly-don't think I care for the d-d rascals a effusion of human blood is serious, and the inquiry, too, without the Riot Act. Captain, would you oblige me to fall back a little closer round the court-house, and maintain the freedom of election? Besides, the Riot Act is up-stairs in my desk. The court-house must be protected, you know, and I just want to run up-stairs for the Riot Act; I'll be down again in a moment. Captain, do oblige me-draw your men a leelle closer around the court-house." "I'm in a better position here, sir," said the captain. "I thought you were under my command, sir," said the sheriff. "Under your command to fire, sir, but the choice of position rests with me; and we are stronger where we are; the court-house is completely covered, and while my men are under arms here, you may rely on it the crowd is completely in check without firing a shot."

Oif ran the sheriff to the court-house. "You're saving of your gunpowder, I see, sir," said O'Grady to the captain, with a sardonic grin. "You seem to be equally sparing of your humanity, sir," returned the captain. "God forbid I should be afraid of a pack of ruffians," said O'Grady.

"Or I of a single one," returned the captain, with a look of stern contempt.

There is no knowing what this bitter bandying of hard words might have led to, had it not been interrupted by the appearance of the sheriff at one of the windows of the court-house; there, with the Riot Act in his hand. he called out:

"Now I've read it-fire away, boys-thre away!" and all his companction about the effusion of blood vanished the moment his own miserable carcass was safe from harm. Again he waved the Riot Act from the window. and vociferated, "Fire away, boys!" as loud as his frog-like voice permitted.

"Now, sir, you're ordered to fire," said O'Grady to the captain.

"I'll not obey that order, sir," said the captain; "the man is out of his senses with fear, and I'll not obey such a serious command from a madman."

"Do you dare disobey the orders of the sheriff, sir?" thundered O'Grady. "I am responsible for my act, sir," said the captain-"seriously responsible; but I will not slaughter unarm ed poople until I see further and fitter cause." The sherilf had vanished—he was nowhere to be seen -and O Grady, as a maristrate, had now the command. Seeing the cool and conrageous man he had to deal with "Indeed, you didn't. You said I was a great many in the military chief, he determined to push natters to

*The name given to the police by the people—the *A saying among the Irish peasantry-meaning there force being first established by Sir Robert Peel then Mr. Peel, Secretary for Ireland.

fense, to fire. With this object in view, he ordered a then-I want the meeting over before my father hears fresh advance of the police upon the people, and in this of the quarrel; I'm his only child, Dick, and you know third affair matters assumed a more serious aspect; how he loves me!" sticks and stones were used with more effect, and the . He wrung Dick's hand as he spoke, and his eye glistwo parties being near to each other, the missiles meant | tened with tenderness; but with the lightning quickonly for the police overshot their mark and struck the soldiers, who bore their painful situation with admirable | Scatterbrain struggling his way toward him, and read patience.

This was but reasonable-so reasonable, that even the rage of the mob, whose blood was now thoroughly sistless stream upon them.

O'Grady repeated his command to the captain, who, finding matters thus driven to extremity, saw no longer the possibility of avoiding bloodshed; and the first preparatory word of the fatal order was given, the second on his lips, and the long file of bright muskets flashed in the sun ere they should quench his light forever to some, and carry darkness to many a heart and hearth, when a young and handsome man, mounted on a noble horse, came plunging and plowing his way through the crowd, and, rushing between the half-leveled muskets and those who in another instant would have fallen their victims, he shouted in a voice whose noble tone carried to its hearers involuntary obedience, "Stop!hair streamed about his noble face, pale from excitement, and with flashing eyes, he was a model worthy of the best days of Grecian art—ay, and he had a soul worthy of the most glorious times of Grecian liberty! It was Edward Q'Connor,

"Fire!" cried O'Grady again. nor, and roused by the brutality of O'Grady beyond his patience, in the excitement of the moment, was urged vehemently, "I'll be dammed if I do! I wouldn't run the risk of shooting that noble fellow for all the magistrates in your county." O'Connor had again turned round, and rode up to the military party, having heard the word "fire!" re-

"For mercy's sake, sir, don't fire, and I pledge you my soul the crowd will disperse." Ay!" cried O'Grady, "they won't obey the laws nor the magistrates; and they'll listen fast enough to a d-d rebel like you."

"Liar and ruffian!" exclaimed Edward. "I'm a better and more loyal subject than you, who provoke resistance to the laws you should make honored."

At the word "liar," O'Grady, now quite frenzied, attempted to seize a musket from a soldier beside him; and had he succeeded in obtaining possession of it, Edward O'Connor's days had been numbered; but the soldier would not give up his firelock, and O'Grady, intent on immediate vengeance, then rushed upon Edward, and seizing him by the leg, attempted to unhorse him; but Edward was too firm in his seat for this, and a struggle ensued.

The crowd, fearing Edward was about to fall a victim, raised a flerce shout, and were about to advance, when the captain, with admirable presence of mind, seized through his hat just above his head. O'Grady, dragged him away from his hold, and gave freedom to Edward, who instantly used it again to charge the advancing line of the mob, and drive them back.

peated.

"Back, boys, back!" he cried, "don't give your enemies a triumph by being disorderly. Disperse-retire into houses, let nothing tempt you to riot-collect round your tally-rooms, and come up quietly to the pollingand you will yet have a peaceful triumph."

The crowd, obeying, gave three cheers for "Ned-o'the-Hill," and the dense mass, which could not be awed, and dreaded not the engines of war, melted away before the breath of peace.

As they retired on one side, the soldiers were ordered to their quarters on the other, while their captain and Edward O'Connor stood in the midst; but ere they separated, these two, with charity in their souls, waved their hands toward each other in token of amity, and parted, verily, in friendship.

CHAPTER XX.

AFTER the incidents just recorded, of course great confusion and excitement existed, during which O'Grady was forced back into the court-house in a right arm, which, though hastily bound in a handkerstate bordering on insanity. Inflamed as his furious chief, was bleeding profusely, and racked with torture. passions had been to the top of their bent, and his On finding his right hand powerless, such was his thirst of revenge still remaining unslaked, foiled in all unflinching courage, that he took the pistol in his left; his movements, and flung back as it were into the this of course impaired his power of aim, and his nerve seething caldron of his own hellish temper, he was a was so shattered by his bodily suffering, that his pistol pitiable sight, foaming at the mouth like a wild animal, was discharged before coming to the level, and Edward and uttering the most horrid imprecations. On Ed- saw the sod torn up close beside his foot. He then, of ward O'Connor principally his curses fell, with denun- course, fired in the air. O'Grady would have fallen but ciations of immediate vengeance, and the punishment for the immediate assistance of his friends; he was led of dismissal from the service was prophesied on oath from the ground and placed in a carriage, and it was for the English captain. The terrors of a court-martial not until Edward O'Connor mounted his horse to ride gleamed fitfully through the frenzied mind of the raving away, that the crowd manifested their feelings. Then Squire for the soldier; and for O'Connor, instant death | three tremendous cheers arose; and the shouts of their at his own hands was his momentary cry.

"Find the rascal for me," he exclaimed, "that I may call him out and shoot him like a dog-yes, by ---, a dog-a dog; I'm disgraced while he lives-I wish the villain had three lives that I might take them all at once-all-all!" and he stretched out his hands as he spoke, and grasped at the air as if in imagination he clutched the visionary lives his bloodthirsty wishes coniured up.

Edward, as soon as he saw the crowd dispersed, rehe might be in readiness to undertake, on his part, the arrangement of the hostile meeting, to which he knew he should be immediately called. "Let it be over, my dear Dick, as soon as possible," said Edward; "it's not until the eve of the fifth that her house was turned not a case in which delay can be of any service; the in- upside down and inside out for the reception of the sidt was mortal between us, and the sooner expiated numerous guests whose company she expected. by a meeting the better."

"Don't be so agitated, Ned, ' said Dick; "fair and essy, man -fair and easy -keep yourself cool." Dear Dick-I'll be cool on the ground, but not till book was published.

ness of thought, all gentle feeling vanished as he saw in his eye the purport of his approach. He communi-"Now will you fire, sir?" said O'Grady to the officer. cated to Edward his object in seeking him, and was at "If I fire now, s ; I am as likely to kill the police as once referred to Dawson, who instantly retired with him the people; withd, w your police first, sir, and then I and arranged an immediate meeting. This was easily will fire." done, as they had their pistols with them since the duel in the morning; and if there be those who think it a O'Grady, enraged almost to madness as he was, could little too much of a good thing to have two duels in one not gainsay it; and he went forward himself to with- day, pray let them remember it was election time, and draw the police force. O'Grady's presence increased even in sober England that period often gives rise to personalities which call for the intervention of the code up, and as the police fell back they were pressed by the of honor. Only in Ireland the thing is sooner over. infuriated people, who now began almost to disregard We seldom have three columns of a newspaper filled the presence of the military, and poured down in a re- with notes on the subject, numbered from 1 to 25.* Gentlemen don't consider whether it is too soon or too late to fight, or whether a gentleman is perfectly entitled to call him out or not. The title in Ireland is generally considered sufficient in the will to do it, and few there would wait for the poising of a very delicately balanced scale of etiquette before going to the ground; they would be more likely to fight first, and leave the world to argue about the niceties after.

In the present instance a duel was unavoidable, and it was to be feared a mortal one, for deadly insult had been given on both sides.

The rumor of the hostile meeting flew like wildfire through the town, and when the parties met in a field about a quarter of a mile beyond the bridge, an anxious for God's sake, stop!" Then wheeling his horse sud- crowd was present. The police were obliged to be in dealy round, he charged along the advancing front of strong force on the ground to keep back the people, the people, plunging his horse fiercely upon them, and who were not now, as an hour before, in the town, in waving them back with his hand, enforcing his com- uproarious noise and action, but still as death; not a mands with words as well as actions. The crowd fell murmur was among them; the excitement of love for back as he pressed upon them with flery horsemanship | the noble young champion, whose life was in danger unsurpassable by an Arab; and as his dark clustering for his care of them, held them spell-bound in a tranquility almost fearful.

The aspect of the two principals was in singular contrast. On the one side a man burning for revenge, who, to use a common but terrible parlance, desired to "wash out the dishonor put upon him in blood." The other was there, regretting that cause existed for the The gallant soldier, touched by the heroism of O'Con- awful arbitrement, and only anxious to defend his own, not take another's life. To sensitive minds the reaction is always painful of having insulted another, when the heyond the habitual parlance of a gentleman, and swore excitement is over which prompted it. When the hot blood which inflamed the brain runs in cooler currents, the man of feeling always regrets, if he does not reproach himself with, having urged his fellow-man to break the commandments of the most High, and deface, perhaps annihilate, the form that was molded in His image. The words "liar and ruftian" haunted Edward's mind reproachfully; but then the provocation-"rebell"-no gentleman could brook it. Because his commiseration for a people had endeared him to them, was he to be called "rebel"? Because at the risk of his own life, he had preserved perhaps scores, and prevented an infraction of the law, was he to be called "rebel"? He stood acquitted before his own conscience:—after all, the most terrible bar before which he can be called in this world.

The men were placed upon their ground, and the word to fire given. O'Grady, in his desire for vengeance, deliberately raised his pistol with deadly aim, and Edward was thus enabled to fire first, yet with such cool precision, that his shot took effect as he intended; O'Grady's arm was ripped up from the wrist to the elbow; but so determined was his will, and so firm his aim, that the wound, severe as it was, produced but a slight twitch in his hand, which threw it up slightly, and saved Edward's life, for the ball passed

O'Grady's arm instantly after dropped to his side, the pistol fell from his hand, and he staggered, for the pain of the wound was extreme. His second ran to his assistance,

"It is only in the arm," said O'Grady, firmly, though his voice was changed by the agony he suffered; "give me another pistol."

Dick at the same moment was beside Edward.

"You're not touched," he said. Edward coolly pointed to his hat.

"Too much powder," said Dick; "I thought so when "No," said Edward, "it was my shot; I saw his hand twitch."

Scatterbrain demanded of Dick another shot on the part of O'Grady. "By all means," was the answer, and he handed a fresh pistol to Edward. "To give the devil his due," said Dick, "he has great pluck, for you hit him hardsee how pale he looks-I don't think he can hurt you much this time-but watch him well, my dear Ned."

The seconds withdrew; but with all O'Grady's desperate courage, he could not lift the pistol with his joy and triumph reached the wounded man as he was driven slowly from the ground.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE widow Flanagan had long ago determined that. whenever the election should take place, she would take advantage of the great influx of visitors that event would produce, and give a grand party. Her preparations were all made to secure a good muster of deadly design on the liberty of the attorney. At the her country friends, when once the day of nomination turned to the hustings and sought Dick Dawson, that was fixed; and after the election began she threw out all her hooks and lines in every direction, to catch every straggler worth having whom the election brought into the town. It required some days to do this; and it was

The toil of the day's election was over; the gentlemen had dined and refreshed themselves with creature comforts; the vicissitudes, and tricks, and chances of the last twelve hours were canvassed—when the striking of many a clock, or the consultation of the pocketdial, warned those who were invited to Mrs. O'Flanagan's party that it was time to wash off the dust of the battle-field from their faces, and mount fresh linen and cambric. Those who were pleased to call themselves "good fellows" declared for "another bottle;" the faint-hearted swore that an autograph invitation from Venus herself to the heathen Olympus, with nectar and ambrosia for tea and bread-and-butter, could not tempt them from the Christian enjoyment of a feather bed after the fag of such a day; but preux chevallersthose who did deserve to win a fair lady-shook off sloth and their morning trowsers, and taking to tights and activity, hurried to the party of the buxon widow.

The widow was in her glory; hospitable, she enjoyed receiving her friends-mirthful, she looked forward to a long night of downright sport-coquettish, she would have good opportunity of letting Tom Durfy see how attractive she was to the men, -while from the women her love of gossip and scandal (was there ever a lady in her position without it?) would have ample gratification in the accumulated news of the county of twenty miles round. She had but one large room at her command, and that was given up to the dancing; and being cleared of tables, chairs, and carpet, could not be considered by Mrs. Flanagan as a proper reception-room for her guests, who were, therefore, received in a smaller apartment, where tea and coffee, toast and muffins, ladies and gentlemen, were all smoking-hot together, and the candles on the mantel-piece trickling down rivulets of fat in the most sympathetic manner, under the influence of the gentle sighing of a broken pane of glass, which the head of an inquiring youth in the street had stove in, while flattening his nose against it in the hope of getting a glimpse of the company through the opening in the window-curtain.

At last, when the room could hold no more, the company were drafted off to the dancing-room, which had only long deal forms placed against the wall to rest the weary after the exertions of the jig. The aforesaid forms, by-the-by, were borrowed from the chapel; the old wigsby who had the care of them for some time doubted the propriety of the sacred property being put to such a profane use, until the widow's arguments convinced him it was quite right, after she had given him a tenpenny-piece. As the dancing-room could not boast of a luster, the deficiency was supplied by tin sconces hung against the wall; for ormula branches are not expected to be plenty in the provinces. But let the widow be heard for herself, as she bustled through her guests and caught a critical glance at her arrangements: "What's that you're faulting now?-is it my deal seats without cushions? Ah! you're a lazy Larry, Bob Larkin. Cock you up with a cushion in deed! if you sit the less, you'll dance the more. Ah, Matty, I see you're eying my tin sconces there; well, sure they have them at the county ball, when candlesticks are scarce, and what would you expect grander from a poor lone woman? besides, we must have plenty of lights or how could the beaux see the girls? -though I see, Harry Cassidy, by your sly look, that you think they look as well in the dark-ah! you divil!" and she slapped his shoulder as she ran past. "Ah! Mister Murphy, I'm delighted to see you; what kept you so late?—the election to be sure. Well, we're beating them, ain't we? Ah! the old country forever. I hope Edward O'Connor will be here. Come, begin the dance; there's the piper and the fiddler in the corner as idle as a mile-stone without a number. Tom Durfy. don't ask me to dance, for I'm engaged for the next four sets."

"Oh! but the first to me," said Tom. "Ah! yis, Tom, I was; but then, you know, I couldn't refuse the stranger from Dublin, and the English captain that will be there by-and-by; he's a nice man, too, and, long life to him, wouldn't fire on the people the other day: I vow to the Virgin, all the women in the room ought to kiss him when he comes in. Ah, doctor! there you are; there's Mrs. Gubbins in the corner dying to have a chat with you; go over to her. Whe's that tagzing the piano there? Ah! James Reddy, it's yeu, I see. I hope it's in tune; 'tis only four months since the tuner was here. I hope you've a new song for us, James. The tuner is so scarce, Mrs. Riley, in the country-not like Dublin; but we poor country people, you know, must put up with what we can get; not like you citizens, who has lashings of luxuries as easy as peas." Then, in a confidential whisper, she said, "I hope your daughter has practiced the new piece well to-day, for I couldn't be looking after her, you know, to-day, being in such a bustle with my party; I was just like a dog in a fair, in and out everywhere; but I hope she's perfect in the piece;" then, still more confidentially, she added, "for he's here-ah! I wish it was, Mrs. Riley;" then, with a nod and a wink, off she rattled through the room with a word for everybody.

The Mrs. Riley, to whom she was so confidential, was a friend from Dublin, an atrociously vulgar woman, with a more vulgar daughter, who were on a visit with Mrs. Flanagan. The widow and the mother thought Murtough Murphy would be a good speculation for the daughter to "cock her cap at" (to use their own phrase), and with this view the visit to the country was projected. But matters did not prosper; Murphy was not much of a marrying man; and if ever he might be caught in the toils of Hymen, some frank, joyous, unaffected, dashing girl would have been the only one likely to serve a writ on the jovial attorney's heart. Now, Miss Riley was, to use Murtough Murphy's own phrase, "a batch of brass and a stack of affectation," and the airs she attempted to play off on the country folk (Murphy in particular) only made her an object for his mischievous merriment; as an example, we may as well touch on one little incident en passant.

The widow had planned one day a walking party to a picturesque ruin, not far from the town, and determined that Murphy should give his arm to Miss Riley; for the party was arranged in couples, with a most appointed hour all had arrived but Murphy; the widow thought it a happy chance, so she hurried off the party, leaving Miss Riley to wait and follow under his escort. In about a quarter of an hour he came, having met the widow in the street, who sent him back for Miss Riley. Now Murtough saw the trap which was intended for him, and thought it fair to make what fun he could of the affair, and being already sickened by various disgusting exhibitions of the damsel's affectation, he had the less scruple of "taking her down a peg," as he said himself.

When Murtough reached the house and asked for ^{*} Just such a lengthy correspondence had appeared in the London journals when the first edition of this

Miss Riley, he was ushered into the little drawingroom; and there was that very full-blown young lady, on a chair before the fire, her left foot resting on the fender, her right crossed over it, and her body thrown back in a reclining attitude, with a sentimental droop of the head over a greasy novel: her figure was rather developed by her posture, indeed more so than Miss Riley quite intended, for her ankles were not unexceptionable, and the position of her feet revealed rather more. A bonnet and green vail lay on the hearth-rug, and her shawl hung over the handle of the fire-shovel. | cept that of the eyes." When Murphy entered, he was received with a faint "dow d' do?"

"Pretty well, I thank you-how are you?" said Murphy, in his rollicking tone.

"Oh! Miste' Murphy, you are so odd."

"Odd, am I—how am I odd?"

"Oh! 80 odd."

"Well, you'd better put on your bonnet and come walk, and we can talk of my oddity after."

"Oh, indeed, I cawn't walk." "Can't walk!" exclaimed Murphy. "Why can't you walk? I was sent for you." "'Deed I cawn't."

"Ah, now!" said Murphy, giving her a little tender poke of his forefinger on the shoulder

Don't, Mister Murphy, pray don't." "But why won't you walk?"
"I'm too delicate."

Murphy uttered a very long "Oh!!!!!"

"'Deed I am, Miste' Murphy, though you may disbelieve it." "Well-a nice walk is the best thing in the world for the health. Come along!" "Cawn't indeed; a gentle walk on a terrace, or a shadowy avenue, is all very well—the Rotunda Gardens, for instance."

"Not forgetting the military bands that play there," said Murphy, "together with the officers of all the barracks in Dublin, clinking their sabers at their heels along the gravel walks, all for the small charge of a fl'penny bit."

Miss Riley gave a reproachful look and a shrug at the vulgar mention of a "fi'penny bit," which Murphy purposely said to shock her" Brummagem gentility." "How can you be so odd, Miste' Murphy?" she said.

"I don't joke, indeed; a gentle walk-I repeat it-is all very well; but these horrid rough country walks—these masculine walks, I may say—are not consistent with a dressed rather in a juvenile style. delicate frame like mine."

"A delicate frame!" said Murtough. "Faith, I'll tell you what it is, Miss Riley," said he, standing bolt upright before her, plunging his hands into his pockets. and fixing his eyes on her feet, which still maintained their original position on the fender-"I'll tell you what it is, Miss Riley, by the vartue of my oath, if your other leg is a match for the one I see, the divil a harm a trot from this to Dublin would do you!"

Miss Riley gave a faint scream, and popped her legs under her chair, while Murphy ran off in a shout of secret of his joke.

But all this did not damp Miss Riley's hopes of winning him. She changed her plan; and seeing he Aski not bow to what she considered the supremacy of her very elegant manners, she set about feigning at once admiration and dread of him. She would sometimes lift her eyes to Murtough with a languishing expression, and declare she never knew anyone she was so afraid of; but even this double attack on his vanity could not turn Murphy's flank, and so a very laughable flirtation went on between them, he letting her employ all the enginery of her sex against him, with a mischievous enjoyment in her blindness at not seeing she was throwing away her powder and shot.

But to return to the party; a rattling country dance called out at once the energies of the piper, the fiddler, and the adies and gentlemen, and left those who had more activity in their heads than their heels to sit on the forms in the background and exercise their tongues in open scandal of their mutual friends and acquaintances under cover of the music, which prevented the most vigorous talker from being heard further than his or her next-door neighbor. Dr. put into execution. Miss Riley was led over to the Growling had gone over to Mrs. Gubbins', as desired, piano by the widow, with the usual protestations that and was buried deep in gossip. "What an extraordinary affair that was about Miss O'Grady, doctor." "Very, ma'am."

"In the man's bed she was, I hear."

"So the story goes, ma'am." "And they tell me, doctor, that when her father, that immaculate madman-God keep us from harm !-- said to poor Mrs. O'Grady, in a great rage, 'Where have you brought up your daughters to go to, ma'am?' said he; and she, poor woman, said, To church, my dear, thinking it was the different religion the Saracen was after; so, says he, 'Church, indeed! there's the church she's gone to, ma'am,' says he, turning down a quilted counterpane. "Are you sure it was not Marseilles, ma'am?" said the doctor. "Well, whatever it was, 'There's the church she's in,'

says he, pulling her out of the bed."

"Out of the bed?" repeated the doctor.

"Out of the bed sir!"

"Then her church was in the diocese of Down," said the doctor. "That's good, docthor-indeed, that's good. 'She was caught in bed,' says I; and 'It's the diocese of Down,' says you; faith, that's good. I wish the diocese was your own; for you're funny enough to be a bishop, docthor, you lay howld of everything.

"That's a great qualification for a miter, ma'am," said the doctor.

"And the poor young man that has got her is not worth a farthing, I hear, doctor."

"Then he must be the curate, ma'am; though I don't think it's a chapel of ease he's got into."

"Oh! what a tongue you have, docthor," said she, laughing; "faith, you'll kill me."

Docthor, don't talk so queer."

"That's my profession, ma'am. I am a licentiate of the Royal College; but, unfortunately for me, my humanity is an overmatch for my science. Phrenologically speaking, my benevolence is large, and my destructiveness and acquisitiveness small.'

"Ah, there you go off on another tack; and what a | flourishing Mrs. Riley. funny new thing that is you talk of !- that free knowledge or crow knowledge, or whatever sort of knowledge you call it. And there's one thing I want to ask you about-there's a bump the ladies have, the gentlemen always laugh at, I remark." "That's very rude of them, ma'am," said the doctor, dryly, "Is it in the anterior region, or the-"

"I'm only speaking scientifically, ma'am."

"Well, I think your scientific discourse is only an excuse for saying impudent things; I mean the back of their heads."

"I thought so, ma'am."

"They call it—dear me, I forget—something—motive -motive-it's Latin-but I am no scholard, docthor." "That's manifest, ma'am."

"But a lady is not bound to know Latin, docthor." "Certainly not, ma'am-nor any other language ex-

Now, this was a wicked hit of the doctor's, for Mrs. Gubbins squinted frightfully; but Mrs. Gubbins did not know that, so she went on. "The bump I mean, docthor, is motive something-motive-motive-I have it!-motive-ness." "Now, I know what you mean," said the doctor;

"annativeness." "That's it," said Mrs. Gubbins; "they call it number one, sometimes; I suppose amativeness is Latin for number one. Now, what does that bump mean?" "Ah, madam," said the doctor, puzzled for a moment to give an explanation; but in a few seconds he answered, "That's a beautiful provision of nature. That, ma'am, is the organ which makes your sex take compassion on ours.

"Wonderfull" said Mrs. Gubbins; "but how good nature is in giving us provision! and I don't think there is a finer provision county in Ireland than this."

"Certainly not, ma'am," said the doctor; but the moment Mrs. Gubbins began to speak of provisions, he was sure she would get into a very solid discourse about her own farms; so he left his seat beside her and went over to Mrs. Riley, to see what fun could be had in that quarter.

Her daughter was cutting all sorts of barefaced capers about the room, "astonishing the natives," as she was pleased to say; and Growling was looking on in amused wonder at this specimen of vulgar effrontery. whom he had christened "The Brazen Baggage" the first time he saw her.

"You are looking at my daughter, sir," said the delighted mother.

"Yes, ma'am," said the doctor, profoundly. "She's very young, sir."

"She'll mend of that, ma'am. We were young once ourselves."

This was not very agreeable to the mother, who

"I mean, sir, that you must excuse any little awkwardness about her-that all arises out of timidity-she was lost with bashfulness till I roused her out of it—but now I think she is beginning to have a little self-possession."

The doctor was amused, and took a large pinch of snuff; he enjoyed the phrase "beginning to have a little self-possession" being applied to the most brazen baggage he ever saw.

"She's very accomplished, sir," continued the mother. "Mister Jew-val (Duval) taitches her dancin', laughter, and joined the party, to whom he made no and Musha Dunny-ai (Mons. Du Noyer)t French. Misther Low-jeer (Logier) hasn't the like of her in his academy on the pianya: and as for the harp, you'd think she wouldn't l'ave a sthring in it."

"She must be a treasure to her teachers, ma'am," said the doctor.

"Faith, you may well say threasure—it costs handfuls o' money; but sure, while there's room for improvement, every apartment must be attended to, and the vocal apartment is filled by Sir John--ilfteen shillin's a lesson, no less."

"What silvery tones she ought to bring out, ma'am,

"Faith, you may say that, sir. It's coining, so it is, with them tip-top men, and ruins one a'most to have a daughter; every shake I get out of her is to the tune of a ten-poun' note, at least. You shall hear her by-andby; the minit the dancin' is over she shall sing you the 'Bewildhered Maid.' Do you know the 'Bewildhered Maid, 'sir?"

"I haven't the honor of her acquaintance, ma'am," said the doctor.

The dancing was soon over, and the mother's threat she was hoarse. It took some time to get the piano ready, for an extensive clearance was to be made from it of cups and saucers, and half empty glasse of nerus, before it could be opened; then, after various thrummings and hummings and hawings, the "Bewildnered Maid" made her appearance in the wildest possible manner, and the final shrick was quite worthy of a maniae. Loud applause followed, and the wriggling Miss Riley was led from the piano by James Reddy, who had stood at the back of her chair, swaying backward and forward to the music, with a mandlin expression of sentiment on his face, and a suppressed exclamation of "B-u-titul!" after every extra shout from the young lady. Growling listened with an expression of as much dissatisfaction as if he had been drinking weak punch. "I see you don't like that," said the widow to him, under her breath; "ah, you're too hard, doctor-consider she sung out of good-nature."

"I don't know if it was out of good-nature," said he: "but I'm sure it was out of tune.

James Reddy led back Miss Riley to her mamma, who was much delighted with the open manifestations of the "poet's" admiration. "She ought to be proud, sir, of your conjunction, I'm sure. A poet like you, sir!—what beautiful rhymes them wor you did on the 'lection."

"A trifle, ma'am-a mere trifle-a little occasional thing.15

"Oh! but them two beautiful lines:

'We tread the land that bore us, Our green flag glitters o'er us!"

"They are only a quotation, ma'am," said Reddy. "Oh, like every man of true genius, sir, you try and undervalue your own work; but call them lines what you like, to my taste they are the most beautiful lines in the thing you done."

Reddy did not know what to answer, and his confusion was increased by catching old Growling's eye, who was chuckling at the mal-a-propos speech of the

"Don't you sing yourself, sir?" said that lady. "To be sure he does," cried the widow Flanagan; "and he must give us one of his own."

* This very ingenious answer was really given by an Irish professor to an over-inquisitive lady. + My own worthy and excellent master, to whom I gladly pay this tribute of kindly remembrance.

" Oh!"

"No excuses; now, James!" "Where's Duggan?" inquired the poetaster, affect edly; "I told him to be here to accompany me." "I attend your muse, sir," said a miserable structure of skin and bone, advancing with a low bow and obsequious smile: this was the poor music-master, who set Reddy's rhymes to music as bad, and danced attend ance on him everywhere.

The music-master fumbled over a hackneyed prelude to show his command of the instrument.

Miss Riley whispered to her mamma that it was out of one of her first books of lessons. Mrs. Flanagan, with a seductive smirk, asked, "white he was going to give them?" The poet replied, "a little thing of his own-'Rosalie; or, the Broken Heart'- sentimental, but rather sad. 19 The musical skeleton rattled his bones against the ivory in a very one, two, three, four symphony; the poet ran his fingers through his hair, pulled up his col lar, gave his head a jaunty nod, and commenced:

ROSALIE;

OR, THE BROKEN HEART.

Fare thee-fare thee well-alas! Fare—farewell to thee! On pleasure's wings, as dewdrops fade, Or honey stings the bee, My heart is assad as a black stone

Under the blue sea, Oh, Rosalie! Oh, Rosalie!

As ruder rocks with envy glow, Thy coral lips to see, So the weeping waves more briny grow With my salt tears for thee!

My heart is as sad as a black stone Under the blue sea.

Oh, Rosalie! Oh, Rosalle!

After this brilliant specimen of the mysteriously-sentimental and imaginative school was sufficiently applauded, dancing was recommenced, and Reddy seated himself beside Mrs. Riley, the incense of whose praise was sweet in his nostrils. "Oh, you hare a soul for poetry indeed, sir," said the lady. "I was bewildered with all your beautiful idays; that 'honey stings the bee' is a beautiful iday-so expressive of the pains and pleasures of love. Ah! I was the most romantic creature myself once, Mr. Reddy, though you wouldn't think it now; but the cares of the world and a family takes the shine out of us. I remember when the men used to be making hats in my father's establishmentfor my father was the most extensive hatter in Dublin -I don't know if you knew my father was a hatter; but you know, sir, manufactures must be followed, and that's no reason why people shouldn't enjoy po'thry and refinement. Well, I was going to tell you how romantic I was, and when the men were making the hate -I don't know whether you ever saw them making hats-"

Reddy declared he never did. "Well, it's like the witches round the iron pot in Macbeth did you ever see Kemble in Macbeth? Oh! he'd make your blood freeze, though the pit is so hot you wouldn't have a dhry rag on you. But to come to the hats. When they're making them, they have hardly any crown to them at all, and they are all with great sprawling wide flaps on them; well, the moment I clapt my eyes on one of them, I thought of a Spanish nobleman directly, with his slouched hat and black feathers like a hearse. Yes, I assure you, the broad hat always brought to my mind a Spanish noble or an Italian noble (that would do as well, you know), or a robber or a murderer, which is all the same thing."

Reddy could not conceive a hat manufactory as a favorable nursery for romance; but as the lady praised his song, he listened complacently to her hatting. "And that's another beautiful iday, sir," continued the lady, "where you make the rocks jealous of each other-that's so beautiful to bring in a bit of nature into a metaphysic that way." "You flatter me, ma'am," said Reddy; "but if I might speak of my own work—that is, if a man may ever speak of his own work-" "And why not, sir?" asked Mrs. Riley, with a business-like air; "who has so good a right to speak of the work as the man who done it, and knows what's in it?" "That's a very sensible remark of yours, ma'am, and I will therefore take leave to say, that the idea I am proudest of, is the dark and heavy grief of the heart being compared to a black stone, and its depth of misery implied by the sea."

"Thrue for you," said Mrs. Riley; "and the blue sea -ah! that didn't escape me; that's an elegant touch the black stone and the blue sea; and black and blue, such a beautiful conthrast!"

"I own," said Reddy, "I attempted, in that, the bold and daring style of expression which Byron has introduced,"

"Oh, he's a fine pote certainly, but he's not moral, sir: and I'm afeard to let my daughter read such combustibles."

"But he's grand," said Reddy; "for instance-

'She walks in beauty like the night

How fine!"

"But how wicked!" said Mrs. Riley. "I don't like that night-walking style of poetry at all, so say no more about it; we'll talk of something else. You admire music, I'm sure." "I adore it, ma'am."

"Do you like the plano?" "Oh ma'am! I could live under a piano," "My daughter plays the piano beautiful."

"Charmingly." "Oh, but if you heerd her play the harp, you'd think she wouldn't lave a sthring on it" (this was Mrs. Riley's favorite bit of praise); "and a beautiful harp it is, one of Egan's double action, all over goold, and cost eighty mineas; Miss Cheese chuse it for her. Do you know Miss Cheese? she's as plump as a partridge, with a voice like a lark; she sings elegant duets. Do you ever sing duets?"

"Not often." "Ah! if you could hear Pether Dowling sing duets with my daughter! he'd make the hair stand straight on your head with the delight. Oh, he's a powerful singer! you never heerd the like; he runs up and down as fast as a lamplighter;—and the beautiful turns he gives; oh! I never heerd any one sing a second like Pether. I declare he sings a second to that degree that you'd think it was the first, and never at a loss for a shake; and then off he goes in a run, that you'd think he'd never come back; but he does bring it back into the

1 never heerd a singer like Pether!"

There is no knowing how much more Mrs. Riley would have said about "Pether," if the end of the and all knew with what touching expression he gave dance had not cut her eloquence short by permitting the groups of dancers, as they promenaded, to throw in their desultory discourse right and left, and so break up anything like a consecutive conversation.

But let it not be supposed that all Mrs. Flanagan's the object might be proud. guests were of the Gubbins and Riley stamp. There were some of the better class of the country people present; intelligence and courtery in the one sex, and gentleness and natural grace in the other, making a society not to be ridiculed in the mass, though individual instances of folly and ignorance and purse-proud effrontery were among it.

But to Growling every phase of society afforded gratification; and while no one had a keener relish for such scenes as the one in which we have just witnessed him, the learned and the courteous could be met with equal weapons by the doctor when he liked. Quitting the dancing-room, he went into the little drawing-room, where a party of a very different stamp was engaged in conversation. Edward O'Connor and the "dear English captain," as Mrs. Flanagan called him, were deep in an interesting discussion about the relative practices in Ireland and England on the occasions of elections and trials, and most other public events; and O'Connor and two or three list teners-among whom was a Mr. Monk, whose daughters, remarkably nice girls, were of the party-were delighted with the feeling tone in which the Englishman spoke of the poorer classes of Irish, and how often the excesses into which they sometimes fell were viewed through an exaggerated or distorted medium, and what was frequently mere exuberance of spirit pronounced and punished as riot.

"Inever saw a people over whom those in authority require more good temper," remarked the cap-

"Gentleness goes a long way with them," said Ed-

"And violence never succeeds," added Mr. Monk. "You are of opinion, then," said the soldier, "they are not to be forced?"

"Except to do what they like," chimed in Growling, "That's a very Irish sort of coercion," said the captain, smiling.

"and I never knew an intelligent Englishman yet, who came to Ireland, who did not find it out. Paddy has a highly as beauty in a woman's. touch of the pig in him-he won't be driven, but you may coax him a long way; or if you appeal to his reason power of singing, but the mere physical quality of a -for he happens to have such a thing about him-you line voice, which in the bare utterance of the simplest more; the work of demolition had been in able hands, may persuade him into what is right if you take the words is pleasing, but, becoming the medium for the introuble.

with Paddy; the rascals are so ready with quip, and he sung had meaning in it which could reach the hearts equivoque, and queer answers, that they generally of all his auditory, though its poetry might be apget the best of it in talk, however fallacious may be preciated by but few; its imagery grew upon a stem their argument, and when you think you have Pat in a whose root was in every bosom, and the song that corner and escape is inevitable, he's off without your possesses this quality, whatever may be its defects, knowing how he slipped through your fingers."

knowing his powers, gave up the captain into his hands, between the silence the song had produced and the and sat down by the side of Miss Monk, who had just 'simultaneous clapping of hands outside the door when entered from the dancing-room, and retired to a chair it was over; not the poor plaudit of a fashionable asin the corner. particularly interesting to him. She spoke of having terms of affectionate admiration, that Edward hung upon every word with delight. I know not if hiss Monk was aware of Edward's devotion in that quarter before, but she could not look upon the bland though somewhat sad smile which arched his expressive mouth, and heart. No; such was not the applause which followed the dilated eye which beamed as her praises were uttered, without being then conscious that Fanny Dawson had made him captive.

with that inherent pleasure a woman has in touching a poor innocents really opened their mouths and clapped man's heart, even though it be not on her own account; their hands. Oh, fie! tell it not in Grosvenor-square. and it was done with tact and delicacy which only their discourse. While they were talking, the merry hostess entered; and the last words the captain uttered fell upon her ear, and then followed a reply from Growling, saying that Irishmen were as hard to catch as quicksilver. "Ay, and as hard to keep as any other Irish fellows tell you of themselves, they are all mad divils alike-you steady Englishmen are the safe menand the girls know it. And faith, if you try them," added she, laughing, "I don't know any one more likely to have luck with them than yourself; for, pon my conscience, captain, we all dote on you since you would not shoot the people the other day."

There was a titter among the girls at this open gard to Reddy's singing.

avowal. "Ah, why wouldn't I say it?" exclaimed she, laughhu. "I am not a mealy-mouthed miss; sure I ma. tell truth; and I wouldn't trust one o' ye," she added, with a very significant nod of the head at the gentlemen, "except the captain. Yes-I'd trust one more-I'd trust Mister O'Connor; I think he really could be true to a woman."

The words fell sweetly uson his ear; the expression you must indulge me by finishing it—that's a gem." of trust in his faith at that moment, even from the laughing widow, was pleasing; for his heart was full of the woman he adored, and it was only by long wait- ing, "for their want of taste; but never mind that: ing and untiring fidelity she could ever become his.

He bowed courteously to the compliment the hostess paid him; and she, immediately taking advantage of his acknowledgment, said that after hav- | kept Reddy, who he knew was very fond of a good suping paid him such a pretty compliment he couldn't refuse her to sing a song. Edward never liked to son for audience, and that one humbugging him. The sing in mixed companies, and was about making seene was rich; the gravity with which the doctor carsome objection, when the widow interrupted him | ried on the quiz was admirable, and the gullibility of with one of those Irish "Ah, now's," so hard to reroom, or indeed I wouldn't ask you; and here there's not one won't be charmed with you. Ah, rapturous "charming" or "bravissimo," at the egrelook at Miss Monk, there-I know she's dying to hear you; and see all the ladies hanging on your lips abso- while the laughter of the supper-room and the inviting lutely. Can you refuse me after that, now?"

one of those effusions of deep, and carpest, and poetic please."

tune again with as nate a tit as a Limerick glove. Oh! feeling which love had prompted to his muse rosetto his lips, and he began to sing.

All were silent, for the poet singer was a favorite, his compositions; but now the mellow tones of his voice seemed to vibrate with a feeling in more than common unison with the words, and his dark earnest eyes beamed with a devotion of which she who was

A LEAF THAT REMINDS OF THEE.

How sweet is the hour we give, When fancy may wander free, To the friends who in memory live!-For then I remember thee! Then wing'd, like the dove from the ark My heart, o'er a stormy sea, Brings back to my lonely bark A leaf that reminds of thee!

But still does the sky look dark, The waters still deep and wide; Oh! when may my lonely bark In peace on the shore abide? But through the future far, Dark though my course may be, Thou art my guiding star! My heart still turns to thee.

When I see thy friends I smile. I sigh when I hear thy name; But they cannot tell the while Whence the smile of the sadness came; Vainly the world may deem The cause of my sighs they know; The breeze that stirs the stream Knows not the depth below.

Before the first verse of the song was over, the entrance to the room was filled with eager listeners, and, at its conclusion, a large proportion of the company from the dancing-room had crowded round the door, attracted by the rich voice of the singer, and fascinated into silence by the charm of his song. Perhaps after mental qualities, the most valuable gift a man can "And therefore fit for Irishmen," said Growling; have is a fine voice! it at once commands attention, and may therefore be ranked in a man's possession as

In speaking thus of voice, I do not allude to the terchange of higher thoughts, is irresistible. Super-"By Jove," said the captain, "it is not easy to argue added to this gift, which Edward possessed, the song contains not only the elements of future fame, but of When the doctor joined the conversation, Edward, immediate popularity. Startling was the contrast sembly, whose "bravo" is an attenuated note of admira-She and Edward soon got engaged in a conversation—tion, struggling into a sickly existence and expiring in a sigh-applause of so suspicious a character, that no lately met Fanny Dawson, and was praising her in such one seems desirous of owning it—a feeble forgery of satisfaction which people think it disgraceful to be caught uttering. The clapping was not the plaudits of high-bred hands, whose sound is like the fluttering of small wings, just enough to stir gossamer—but not the Edward's song; he had the outburst of heart-warm and unsophisticated satisfaction unfettered by chilling convention. Most of his hearers did not know that it was She was pleased, and continued the conversation disgraceful to admit being too well pleased, and the

And now James Reddy contrived to be asked to sing; women possess, and which is so refined that the rough- the coxcomb, not content with his luck in being night is bitter cold, I can tell you." er nature of man is insensible of its drift and influence, listened to before, panted for such another burst of apand he is betrayed by a net whose meshes are too fine plause as greeted Edward, whose song he had no for his perception. Edward O'Connor never dreamt notion was any better than his own; the puppy fancied that Miss Monk saw he was in love with the subject of this rubbish of the "black stone under the blue sea" partook of a grander character of composition, and that while Edward's "breeze" but "stirred the stream," he had fathomed the ocean. But a "heavy blow and great discouragement" was in store for Master James, for as he commenced a love ditty which he called by the silver," said the widow; "don't believe what these wild | fascinating title of "The Rose of Silence," and verily believed would have enraptured every woman in the room, a powerful voice, richly flavored with the brogue. shouted forth outside the door, "Ma'um, if you pl'uze, supper's sarred." The effect was magical; a rush was made to supper by the crowd in the doorway, and every gentleman in the little drawing-room offered his arm to a lady, and led her off without the smallest re-

His look was worth anything as he saw himself thus boy.

His look was worth anything as he saw himself thus boy.

"You have the horse ready, too, Billy?" unceremoniously deserted and likely soon to be left in sole possession of the room; the old doctor was enchanted with his vexation; and when James ceased to sing, as the last couple were going, the doctor interposed his request that the song should be finished.

"Don't stop, my dear fellow," said the doctor; "that's the best song I have heard a long time, and "Why, you see, doctor, they have all gone to supper."

"Yes, and the devil choke them with it," said Growlone judicious listener is worth a crowd of such fools. you'll admit; so sit down again and sing for me."

The doctor seated himself as he spoke, and there he per, singing away for the bare life, with only one perthe coxcomb who was held captive by his affected ad-"Besides, all the noisy pack are in the dancing- miration exquisitely absurd and almost past belief; even Growling himself was amazed, as he threw in a gious folly of his dupe, who still continued singing, clatter of its knives and forks were ringing in his ear, It was true that in the small room where they sat | When Reddy concluded, the doctor asked might be many; and filled with the tender and passionate senti- felicity of expression in its numbers, leaving the mind | where they could get any accommodation. ment his conversation with Miss Monk had awakened, unsatisfied with but one hearing; once more, if you

For Reddy repeated the last verse. "Very charming, indeed!" said the doctor.

"You really like it?" said Reddy. "Like?" said the doctor-"sir, like is a faint expres sion of what I think of that song. Moore had better look to his laurels, sir!" "Oh, doctor!"

"Ah, you know yourself," said Growling.
"Then that last, doctor—?" said Reddy, inquiringly.

"Is your most successful achievement, sir; there is a mysterious shadowing forth of something in it which is very fine." "You like it better than the 'Black Stone'?" "Pooh! sir; the 'Black Stone,' if I may be allowed an image, is but ordinary paving, while that 'Rose of Silence of yours might strew the path to Parnassus." "And is it not strange, doctor," said Reddy, in a reproachful tone, "that them people should be insensible to that song, and leave the room while I was singing

"Too good for them, sir-above their comprehen sion."

"Besides, so rude!" said Reddy.

"Oh, my dear friend," said the doctor, "when you know more of the world, you'll find out that an appea! from the lower house to the upper," and he charged his hand from the region of his waistcoat to his head as he spoke, "is most influential."

"True, doctor," said Reddy, with a smile; "and suppose we go to supper now."
"Wait a moment," said Growling, holding his button.

"Did you ever try your hand at an epic?"

"No, I can't say that I did."

"I wish you would." "You flatter me, doctor; but don't you think we had better go to supper?"

"Ha!" said the doctor, "your own House of Commons is sending up an appeal-eh?"

"Decidedly, doctor."

"Then you see, my dear friend, you can't wonder at those poor inferior beings hurrying off to indulge their gross appetites, when a man of genius like you is not insensible to the same call. Never wonder again at people leaving your song for supper, Master James," said the doctor, resting his arm on Reddy, and sauntering from the room. "Never wonder again at the triumph of supper over song, for the Swan of Avon him, self would have no chance against roast ducks." Reddy smacked his lips at the word ducks, and the savory odor of the supper-room which they approached hightened his anticipation of an onslaught on one of the aforesaid tempting birds; but, ah! when he entered the room, skeletons of ducks there were, but nothing and the doctor's lachrymose exclamation of "the devil a duck!", found a hollow echo under Reddy's waistcoat. Round the room that deluded minstrel went, seeking what he might devour, but his voyage of discovery for any hot fowl was profitless; and Growling, in silent delight, witnessed his disappointment.

"Come, sir," said the doctor, "there's plenty of punch left, however: I'll take a glass with you, and drink success to your next song, for the last is all I could wish;" and so, indeed it was, for it enabled him to laugh at the poctaster, and cheat him out of his supper.

"Ho, ho!" said Murtough Murphy, who approached the door; "you have found out the punch is good, eh? Faith it is that same, and I'll take another glass of it with you before I go, for the night is cold."

"Are you going so soon?" asked Growling, as he clinked his glass against the attorney's.

"Whisht!" said Murphy, " not a word-I'm slipping away after Dick the Devil: we have a trifle of work in hand quite in his line, and it is time to set about it. Good-by, you'll hear more of it to-morrow-snug's the word. Murphy stole away, for the open departure of so merry a blade would not have been permitted, and in the hall he found Dick mounting a large top-coat and muffling up. "Good people are scarce, you think, Dick," said

Murphy. "I'd recommend you to follow the example, for the

"And as dark as a coal-hole," said Murphy, as he opened the door and looked out. "No matter, I have got a dark lantern," said Dick, which we can use when required; make haste, the gir is round the corner, and the little black mare will roll us over in no time." They left the house quietly, as he spoke, and started on a bit of mischief which demands a separate chapter.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE night was pitch dark, and on rounding the adjacent corner no vehicle could be seen; but a peculiar whistle from Dick was answered by the sound of approaching wheels and the rapid footfalls of a horse, mingled with the light rattle of a smart gig. On the vehicle coming up, Dick took his little mare, that was blacker than the night, by the head, the apron of the gig was thrown down, and out jumped a smart servant-

"Yis, sir," said Billy, touching his hat.

"Then follow, and keep up with me, remember." "Yis, sir,"

"Come to her head, here," and he patted the little mare's neck as he spoke with a caressing "whoa," which was answered by a low neigh of satisfaction, while the impatient pawing of her fore foot showed the animal's desire to start. "What an impatient little devil she is," said Dick, as he mounted the gig; "I'll get in first, Murphy, as I'm going to drive. Now up with you-hook on the apron-that's it-are you all right?"

"Quite," said Murphy. "Then you be into your saddle and after us, Billy," said Dick; "and now let her go."

Billy gave the little black mare her head, and away she went, at a slapping pace, the fire from the road answering the rapid strokes of her nimble feet. The servant then mounted a horse which was tied to a neighboring palisade, and had to gallop for it to come up with his master, who was driving with a swiftness almost fearful, considering the darkness of the night and the narowness of the road he had to traverse, for he was making the best of his course by cross-ways to an adjacent roadside inn, where some non-resident electors were expected to arrive that night by a coach there were only those who were worthy of better venture to request the last verse again; "for," con- from Dublin; for the county town had every nook and things than Edward would have ventured on to the tinued he, "there is a singular beauty of thought and cranny occupied, and this inn was the nearest point

Now don't suppose that they were electors whom Murphy and Dick in their zeal for their party were going over to greet with hearty welcomes and bring up to the poll the next day. Ly no means. They were of the party, or Murpey. the friends of the opposite party, and it was with the design of retarding their movements that this night's about the Lea cure for bruises or dislocations a man excursion was undertaken. These electors were a batch can take." of plain citizens from Dublin, whom the Scatterbrain interest had induced to leave the peace and quiet of the city to tempt the wilds of the country at that wildest of twentieth time during Murphy's various extravagant times-during a contested election; and a night coach was freighted inside and out with the worthy cits, romance the more. whose aggregate voices would be of immense importance the next day; for the contest was close, the country whisky is as mild as milk, and far more wholecounty nearly polled out, and but two days more for some; then, sir, our fine air alone would cure half the the struggle. Now, to intercept these plain unsuspecting men was the object of Murphy, whose well-supplied information had discovered to him this plan of the enemy, which he set about countermining. As they rattled over the rough by-roads many a laugh did the merely following a light whisky diet and sleeping with merry attorney and the untamable Dick the Devil ex- his window open, he was able to dance at the race ball change, as the probable success of their scheme was in a fortnight; as for this knee of mine, it's a trifle, canvassed, and fresh expedients devised to meet the though it was a bad upset too," possible impediments which might interrupt them. As they topped a hill, Murphy pointed out to his companion a moving light in the plain beneath.

"That's the coach, Dick-there are the lamps, we're just in time-spin down the hill, my boy-let me get in as they're at supper, and faith they'll want it, after common here, sir. She was squatted down on one side coming off a coach such a night as this, to say nothing of some of them being aldermen in expectancy perhaps, and of course obliged to play trencher-men as often as they can, as a requisite rehearsal for the parts they must hereafter fill." In fifteen minutes more Dick pulled up before a small cabin within a quarter of a mile of the inn, and the mounted servant tapped at the door, which was immediately opened and a peasant, advancing to the gig, returned the civil salutation with which Dick greeted his run over four or five times a year." approach.

"I wanted to be sure you were ready, Barny." "Oh, do you think I'd fail you, Misther Dick, your honor?" "I thought you might be asleep, Barny."

"Not when you bid me wake, sir; and there's a nice fire ready for you, and as fine a dirrop o' polleen as ever tickled your tongue, sir."

with you by-and-by;" and off whipped Dick again. nessed the little black mare, and then overturned the gig into a ditch.

"That's as natural as life," said Dick.

phy. "Are you much hurt?" said Dick.

"A trifle lame only," said Murphy, laughing and limping. -vou have a very upset look, 'pon my soul," said Dick, as he flashed the light of his lantern on him for a mohis eye, where Dick had purposely planted it.

"Devil take you," said Murtough; "that's too natu-

"There's nothing like looking your part," said Dick. "Well, I may as well complete my attire," said Murtough, so he lay down in the road and took a roll in the mud; "that will do," said he, "and now, Dick, go back the window, so now good-by;" and Murphy, leading the mare, proceeded to the inn, while Dick, with a parting "Luck to you, my boy," turned back to the cottage of Barny.

The coach had set down six inside and ten out passengers (all voters) about ten minutes before Murphy marched up to the inn door, leading the black mare, and calling "ostler" most lustily. His call being answered for "the beast," "the man" next demanded attention; and the landlord wondered all the wonders he phy, sure, at such a time; and the sonsy landlady, too, eye, sure, all ruined with the mud:—and what was it at little doubting man alone refused to be pleased. all? an upset, was it? oh, wirra! and wasn't it lucky he wasn't killed, and they without a spare bed to lay him | son said, sir-" out decent if he was-sure, wouldn't it be horrid for his body to be only on sthraw in the barn, instead of the best feather bed in the house; and, indeed, he'd be welcome to it, only the gintlemen from town had them them elves. all engaged.

"Well, dead or alive, I must stay here to-night, Mrs.

Kelly, at all events." ' And what will you do for a bed?"

"A shake-down in the parlor or a stretch on a sofa will do; my gig is stuck fast in a ditch-my mare tired -ten miles from home-cold night, and my knee hurt." Murphy limped as he spoke.

"Oh! your poor knee," said Mrs. Kelly; "I'll put a "hrop o' whisky and brown paper on it, sure-"And what gentlemen are these, Mrs. Kelly, who have so filled your house?"

"Gintlemen that came by the coach a while agone, and supping in the parlor now, sure.'

"Would you give my compliments, and ask would they allow me, under the present peculiar circumstances, to join them? and in the meantime send somebody down the road to take the cushions out of my gig; for there is no use in attempting to get the gig out till morning."

"Sartinly, Misther Murphy, we'll send for the cushions; but as for the gentlemen, they are all on the other side."

"What other side?"

* Lame beggar.

"The Honorable's voters, sure."

"Pooh! is that all?" said Murphy—"I don't mind that, I've no objection on that account; besides, they need not know who I am," and he gave the landlord a enowing wink, to which the landlord as knowingly returned another.

The message to the gentiemen was delivered, and Murphy was immediately requested to join their party; shis was all he wanted, and he played off his powers of diversion on the innocent citizens so successfully, that before supper was half over they thought themselves m luck to have fallen in with such a chance acquaintance. Murphy fired away jokes, repartees, anecdotes, and country gossip, to their delight; and when the eatables were disposed of, he started them on the punch- tumbiers all round that they might have nothing to do drinking tack afterward so cleverly, that he hoped to see three parts of them tipsy before they retired to rest.

"Considerably, thank you; whisky punch, sir, is

"I doubt that, sir," said a little matter-of-fact man, who had now interposed his reasonable doubts for the declarations, and the interruption only made Murphy

"You speak of your flery Dublin stuff, sir; but our complaints without a grain of physic."

"I doubt that, sir!" said the little man.

came down here last spring on crutches, and from

"How did it happen, sir? Was it your horse-or your harness-or your gig-or-"

"None o' them, sir; it was a Banshee."

"A Banshee!" said the little man: "what's that?" "A peculiar sort of supernatural creature that is of the road, and my mare shied at her, and being a spirited little thing, she attempted to jump the ditch and missed it in the dark," "Jump a ditch, with a gig after her, sir?" said the little man. "Oh; common enough to do that here, sir; she'd have done it easy in the daylight, but she could not measure her distance in the dark, and hang she went into the ditch; but it's a trifle, after all. I am generally

"And you alive to tell it!" said the little man, incred-

"It's hard to kill us here, sir; we are used to acci-

"Well, the worst accident I ever heard of," said one of the citizens, "happened to a friend of mine, who went to visit a friend of his on a Sunday, and all the family happened to be at church; so on driving into "You're the lad, Barny !- good fellow-I'll be back | the yard there was no one to take his horse, therefore he undertook the office of ostler himself; but being un-After going about a quarter of a mile further he used to the duty, he most incautiously took off the pulled up, alighted with Murphy from the gig, unhard horse's bridle before unyoking him from his gig, and had promised the wife to bring home shoes to the the animal, making a furious plunge forward-my friend being before him at the time—the shaft of the gig was driven through his body, and into the coach-"What an escape of my neck I've had!" said Mur- | house gate behind him, and stuck so fast that the horse could not drag it out after; and in this dreadful situation they remained until the family returned from church, and saw the awful occurrence. A servant was dispatched for a doctor, and the shaft was disengaged, "There was a great loccagh" lost in you, Murphy. and drawn out of the man's body-just at the pit of the Wait; let me rub a handful of mud on your face-there stomach; he was laid on a bed, and every one thought of course he must die at once, but he didn't; and the doctor came next day, and he wasn't dead-did what ment, and laughed at Murphy scooping the mud out of he could for him-and, to make a long story short, sir, the man recovered."

"Pooh! pooh!" said the diminutive doubter. "It's true," said the narrator.

"I make no doubt of it, sir," said Murphy; I know a more extraordinary case of recovery myself.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said the cit; "I have not finished my story yet, for the most extraordinary part of to Barny and the mountain dew, while I storm the the story remains to be told; my friend, sir, was a very camp of the Philistines. I think in a couple of hours | sickly man before the accident happened—a rery sickly you may be on the look-out for me; I'll signal you from | man, and after that accident he became a hale, healthy man. What do you think of that, sir?"

"It does not surprise me in the least, sir," said Murphy; "I can account for it readily."

"Well, sir, I never heard it accounted for, though I know it to be true; I should like to hear how you account for it?"

"Very simply, sir," said Murphy; "don't you perbeing sunk in the pit of his stomach?"

Murphy's punning solution of the cause of cure was could cram into a short speech, at seeing Misther Mur- merrity received by the company, whose critical taste was not of that affected nature which despises jeu de was all lamentations for his illigant coat and his poor mots, and will not be satisfied under a jeu d'esprit; the "I doubt the value of a pun always, sir. Dr. John-

> "I know," said Murphy; "that the man who would make a pun would pick a pocket; that's old, sir-but is dearly remembered by all those who cannot make puns aigual to a milliner. gins. "It is the old story of the fox and the grapes.

Did you ever hear, sir, the story of the fox and the grapes? The fox one day was-" "Yes, yes," said Murphy, who, fond of absurdity as he was, could not stand the fox and the grapes by way of something new. "They're sour, said the fox."

"Yes," said Murphy, "a capital story."

"Oh, them fables is so good!" said Wiggins. "All nonsense!" said the diminutive contradictor. "Nonsense, nothing but nonsense; the ridiculous stuff of birds and beasts speaking! As if any one could believe such stuff." "I do-firmly-for one," said Murphy.

"You do?" said the little man. "I do-and do you know why!"

"I cannot indeed conceive," said the little man, with a bitter grin. "It is, sir, because I myself know a case that occurred in this very country of a similar nature." "Do you want to make me believe you knew a fox she. that spoke, sir?" said the mannikin, almost rising into

"Many, sir," said Murphy, "many." "Well! after that!" said the little man.

"But the case I immediately allude to is not of a fox. but a cat," said Murphy.

"A cat? Oh, yes-to be sure-a cat speak indeed!" said the little gentleman. "It is a fact, sir," said Murphy; " and if the company would not object to my relating the story, I will state the particulars." The proposal was received with acclamation; and

Murphy, in great enjoyment of the little man's annovance, cleared his throat, and made all the preparatory demonstrations of a regular ruconteur; but, before he began, he recommended the gentlemen to mix fresh but listen and drink silently. "For of all things in the world," said Murtough, "I hate a song or a story to be interrupted by the rattle of spoons,"

They obeyed; and while they are mixing their punch,

"Programme to the programment and the programment of the programment o chapter to the following

MUNICI LACEND.

CHAPTER XXIII. MURTOUGH MURPHY'S STORY:

BEING

YE MARVELOUS LEGEND OF TOM CONNOR'S CAT. "THERE was a man in these parts, sir, you must know, called Tom Connor, and he had a cat that was equal to any dozen of rat-traps, and he was proud of the baste, and with rayson; for she was worth her weight in goold to him in saving his sacks of meal from the thievery of the rats and mice; for Tom was an ex-"I assure you, sir, a friend of my own from town tensive dealer in corn, and influenced the rise and fall of that article in the market, to the extent of a full dozen of sacks at a time, which he either kept or sold, as the spirit of free trade or monopoly came over him. Indeed, at one time Tom had serious thoughts of applying to the government for a military force to protect his granary when there was a threatened famine in the country."

"Pooh! pooh! sir," said the matter-of-fact little man: "as if a dozen of sacks could be of the smallest consequence in a whole county—pooh! pooh!"

"Well, sir, said Murphy, "I can't help if you don't believe; but it's truth what I am telling you, and pray don't interrupt me, though you may not believe; by the time the story's done you'll have heard more wonderful things than that, -and besides, remember you're a stranger in these parts, and have no notion of the extraordinary things, physical, metaphysical, and magical, which constitute the idiosyncrasy of rural destiny." The little man did not know the meaning of Murphy's last sentence-nor Murphy either; but, having stopped the little man's throat with big words, he proceeded:-

"This cat, sir, you must know, was a great pet, and was so up to everything, that Tom swore she was a'most like a Christian, only she couldn't speak, and had so sensible a look in her eyes, that he was sartin sure the cut knew every word that was said to her. Well, she used to sit by him at breakfast every morning, and the eloquent cock of her tail, as she used to rub against his leg, said, 'Give me some milk, Tom Connor,' as plain as print, and the plentitude of her purr afterwards spoke a gratitude beyond language. Well, one morning, Tom was going to the neighboring town to market, and he childre' out o' the price of the corn; and sure enough, before he sat down to breakfast, there was Tom taking the measure of the children's feet, by cutting notches on a bit of stick; and the wife gave him so many cautions about getting a 'nate fit' for 'Billy's purty feet,' that Tom, in his anxiety to nick the closest possible measure, cut off the child's toe. That disturbed the harmony of the party, and Tom was obliged to breakfast alone, while the mother was endeavoring to our Billy; in short trying to make a heal of his toe. Well, sir, all the time Tom was taking measure for the shoes, the cat was observing him with that luminous peculiarity of eye for which her tribe is remarkable; and when Tom sat down to breakfast, the cat rubbed up against him more vigorously than usual; but Tom, being bewidered between his expected gain in corn and the positive loss of his child's toe, kept never minding her, until the cat, with a sort of caterwauling growt, gave Tom a dab of her claws, that went clean through his leathers, and a little further. 'Wow!' says Tom, with a jump, clapping his hand on the part, and rubbing it, 'by this and that, you drew the blood out o' me, says Tom; 'you wicked divil-tish!-go along!' says he, making a kick at her. With that the cat gave a reproachful look at him, and her eyes glared just like a pair of mail-coach lamps in a fog. With that, sir, the cat, with a mysterious 'mi-ow,' fixed a most penetrating glance on Tom, and distinctly uttered his name. "Tom felt every hair on his head as stiff as a pump-handle; and searcely crediting his ears, he returned a ceive the man discovered a mine of health by a shaft searching look at the cat, who very quietly proceeded in a sort of hasal twang-

> "'Tom Connor,' says she. "'The Lord be good to me!' says Tom, 'if it isn't sp'akin' she is!'

"'Tom Connor,' says she again.

"'Yes ma'am,' says Tom.

"'Come here,' says she; 'whisper-I want to talk to you, Tom,' says she, 'the laste taste in private,' says she-rising on her hams, and beckoning him with her paw out o' the door, with a wink and a toss o' the head

"Well, as you may suppose, Tom didn't know whether "Exactly," said one of the party they called Wig- he was on his head or his heels, but he followed the cat, and off she went and squatted herself under the edge of a little paddock at the back of 'lom's house; and as he came round the corner, she held up her paw again, and laid it on her mouth, as much as to say, 'Le cautions, Tom.' Well, divil a word Tom could tay at all, with the fright, so up he goes to the cat, and says slie-

"'Tom,' says she. 'I have a great respect for you. and there's something I must tell you, beca'so you're losing character with your neighbors,' says she, 'by your goin's on,' says she, 'and it's out o' the respect that. I have for you, that I must tell you,' says she.

"'Thank you, ma'am, says Tom. "'You're goin' off to the town,' says she, 'to buy shoes for the childre', says she, 'and never thought o getting me a pair.' "'You!' says Tom.

"'Yis, me, Tom Connor,' says she; 'and the neighbors wondhers that a respectable man like you allows your cat to go about the counthry barefutted,' says

"'Is it a cat to ware shoes?' says Tom.

"Why not?' says she; 'doesn't horses ware shees?and Have a preffice foot than a loase, I hope, 'say she, with a toss of her lead.

"Fars, she spakes like a woman; so prend of 'feet,' says Tom to himself, astonished, as you may suppose, but pretending never to think it remarkable all that time; and so he went on discoursin'; and says he, 'lt's it is for year, a man, and the file but was shows but that states to have it, hardeth, year sing scenng the hard hip there is these a go three, it on the hard roads."

"And how do you know what hardship my feet has to go through?' says the cat, mighty sharp.

"But, ma'am, 'says Tom, 'I don't well see how yer could fasten a shoe on you, says he. "Leave that to me, says the cat.
"Did any one ever stiel: walnut shells on yeu, pussy? says Tom, with a grin.

Don't be disrespectful, Tom Corner, says the comwith a frown.

anger.

"'l ax your pard'n, ma'am,' says he, "but as for the horses you wor sp'akin' about wearin' shoes, you know their shoes is fastened on with nails, and how would your shoes be fastened on?"

"Ah, you stupid thief! says she, haven't I illigant nails o' my own?' and with that she gave him a dab of her claw that made him roar, " Ow! murdher!' says he.

"'Now, no more of your palaver, Misther Connor,' says the cat; 'just be off and get me the shoes.'

" 'Tare an' ouns!' says Tom, 'what'll become o' me if I'm to get shoes for my cats?' says he, 'for you increase your family four times a year, and you have six or seven every time,' says he; 'and then you must all have two pair apiece-wirra! wirra!-I'll be ruined in shoe-leather,' says Tom.

"'No more o' your stuff,' says the cat; 'don't be standin' here undher the hedge talkin', or we'll lose our karacthers-for I've remarked your wife is jealous,

Tom. "'Pon my sowl, that's thrue, says Tom, with a smirk. "" More fool she, says the cat, for, pon my conscience, Tom, you're as ugly as if you wor bespoke.' "Off ran the cat with these words, leaving Tom in amazement. He said nothing to the family, for fear of fright'ning them, and off he went to the town, as he pretended-for he saw the cat watching him through a hole in the hedge; but when he came to a turn at the squire. end of the road, the dickings a mind he minded the market, good or bad, but went off to Squire Bother- the time, as much as to say, I have her safe. um's, the magisthrit, to sware examinations agen the cat.

"Pooh! pooh!-nonsense!!" broke in the little man, who had listened thus far to Murtough with an expression of mingled wonder and contempt, while the rest of again! the party willingly gave up the reins to nonsense, and more absurd common sense.

"Don't interrupt him, Goggins," said Mister Wiggins. Goggins. "Swear examinations against a cat, indeed! pooh! pooh!"

"My dear sir," said Murtough, remember this is a fair story, and that the country all around here is full of enchantment. As I was telling you, Tom went off to swear examinations."

"Ay, ay!" shouted all but Goggins; "go on with the

"And when Tom was asked to relate the events of the morning, which brought him before Squire Botherum, his brain was so bewildered between his corn, and his cat, and his child's toe, that he made a very confused account of it.

"'Begin your story from the beginning,' said the magistrate to Tom.

"Well, your honor,' says Tom, 'I was goin' to market this mornin', to sell the child's corn-I beg your pard'n-my own toes, I mane, sir.' "'Sell your toes!' said the squire.

"'No, sir, takin' the cat to market, I mane-"'Take a cat to market!' said the squire. 'You're drunk, man.' "'No, your honor, only confused a little; for when the toes began to speak to me—the cat, I mane—I was bothered clane-'

The cat speak to you!' said the squire. 'Phew! worse than before—you're drunk, Tom.'

"No, your honor; it's on the strength of the cat I come to spake to you-' "'I think it's on the strength of a pint of whisky,

Tom-"" By the vartue o' my oath, your honor, it's nothin' but the cat.' And so Tom then told him all about the affair, and the squire was regularly astonished. Just then the bishop of the diocese and the priest of the parish happened to call in, and heard the story; and the bishop and the priest had a tough argument for two hours on the subject; the former swearing she must be a witch; but the priest denying that, and maintaining she was only enchanted; and that part of the argument was afterward referred to the primate, and subsequently to the conclave at Rome; but the Pope declined interfering about cats, saying he had quite enough to do minding his own bulls.

"In the meantime, what are we to do with the cat?" says Botherum.

"'Burn her,' says the bishop, 'she's a witch."

clastical court maintains that—' "Bother the ecclesiastical court!' said the magis- after having eaten the enchanted cat, the devil a thing trate; 'I can only proceed on the statutes;' and with that he pulled down all the law-books in his library, and hunted the laws from Queen Elizabeth down, and be found that they made laws against everything in Ireland except a cat. The devil a thing escaped them but a cat, which did not come within the meaning of any act of parliament—the cats only had escaped. There's the alien act, to be sure,' said the magisfirate, 'and perhaps she's a French spy, in disguise.' "She spakes like a French spy, sure enough,' says I'om; 'and she was missin', I remember, all last Spy-

Wednesday.' "That's suspicious,' says the squire-but conviction might be difficult; and I have a fresh idea,' says

Latherum. "'Faith, it won't keep fresh long, this hot weather,' says Tom; 'so your honor had betther make use of it at wanst. "'Right,' says Botherum,—'we'll make her subject to the game laws; we'll hunt her,' says he.

run out of her. "'Meet me at the cross-roads,' says the squire, 'in the morning, and I'll have the hounds ready.' brain what excuse he could make to the cat for not fatigue of my journey and the necessity of rising early bringing the shoes; and at last he hit one off, just as he saw her cantering up to him, half-a-mile before he got home. "" Where's the shoes, Tom?' says she.

" 'I have not got them to-day, ma'am,' says he. "'Is that the way you keep your promise, Tom?' says the;—'I'll tell you what it is, Tom—I'll tare the eyes out o' the childre' if you don't get me shoes.'

"Whisht! whisht!' says Tom, frightened out of his ble for his children's eyes. 'Don't be in a passion, pussy. The shoemaker said he had not a shoe in his shop, nor a last that would make one to fit you; and he says, I must bring you into the town for him to take your measure.

"'and when am I to go?' says the cat, looking "To-morrow, says Tom. "It's well you said that, Tom, said the cat, or the ject of discussion.

devil an eye I'd leave in your family this night'-and off she hopped.

"Tom thrimbled at the wicked look she gave. "'Remember!' says she, over the hedge, with a bitter caterwaul.

" Never fear,' says Tom.

"Well, sure enough, the next mornin' there was the cat at cock-crow, licking herself as nate as a new pin, to go into the town, and out came Tom with a bag undher his arm, and the cat afther him. "'Now git into this, and I'll carry you into the town," says Tom, opening the bag.

"Sure I can walk with you,' says the cat. "'Oh, that wouldn't do,' says Tom; 'the people in the town is curious and slandherous people, and sure it would rise ugly remarks if I was seen with a cat afther me-a dog is a man's companion by nature, but cats does not stand to rayson.'

"Well, the cat, seeing there was no use in argument, got into the bag, and off Tom set to the cross-roads with the bag over his shoulder, and he came up, qui e innocent-like, to the corner, where the squire, and his huntsman, and the hounds, and a pack o' people were waitin'. Out came the squire on a sudden, just as if it was all by accident.

"God save you, Tom,' says he.

"God save you kindly, sir,' says Ton.

"' What's that bag you have at your back?' says the "'Oh, nothin' at all, sir,' says Tom-makin' a face all

"'Oh, there's something in that bag, I think,' says the squire; 'and you must let me see it.

"'If you bethray me, Tom Connor,' says the cat in a low voice, by this and that I'll never spake to you

"'Pon my honor, sir,' said Tom, with a wink and a very hard, she was, and that's the way she bruk it." enjoyed Murtough's Legend and their companion's twitch of his thumb toward the bag, 'I haven't anything in it.'

"I have been missing my praties of late,' says the "How can you listen to such nonsense?" returned | squire; 'and I'd just like to examine that bag,' says he. "'It is doubting my charackther you'd be, sir?' says

Tom, pretending to be in a passion. "Tom, your sowl! says the voice in the sack, if you let the cat out of the bag, I'll murther you.'

"'An honest man would make no objection to be s'arched,' said the squire; 'and I insist on it,' says he, laying hold o' the bag, and Tom purtending to fight all the time; but, my jewel! before two minutes, they man. shook the cat out o' the bag, sure enough, and off she went with her tail as big as a sweeping brush, and the squire, with a thundering view halloo after her, clapt the dogs at her heels, and away they went for the bare life. Never was there seen such running as that day the cat made for a shaking bog, the loneliest place in the whole country, and there the riders were all thrown out, barrin' the huntsman, who had a web-footed horse on purpose for soft places; and the priest, whose horse could go anywhere by reason of the priest's blessing, and, sure enough, the huntsman and his riverence stuck to the hunt like wax; and just as the cat got on the border of the bog, they saw her give a twist as the foremost dog closed with her, for he gave her a nip in the flank. Still she went on, however, and headed them well, toward an old mud cabin in the middle of the bog, and there they saw her jump in at the window, and up came the dogs the next minit, and gathered round the house with the most horrid howling that ever was heard. The huntsman alighted, and went into the house to turn the cat out again, when what should he see but an old hag lying in bed in the corner.

"'Did you see a cat come in here?' says he. "'Oh, no-o-o-o!' squealed the old hag, in a trembling voice; 'there's no cat here,' says she.

"Yeip, yelp, yelp! went the dogs outside. "'Oh, keep the dogs out o' this,' says the old hag-'oh-o-o-o' and the huntsman saw her eyes glare under the blanket, just like a cat's.

"' Hillo! says the huntsman, pulling down the blanket, and what should he see but the old hag's flank all in a gore of blood.

"'Ow, ow! you old divil—is it you? you ould cat!'

says he, opening the door. "In rushed the dogs-up jumped the old hag, and changing into a cat before their eyes, out she darted tent with his accommodation, for which she made through the window again, and made another run for it; but she couldn't escape, and the dogs gobbled her while you could say 'Jack Robinson.' But the most re-"" Only enchanted,' said the priest- and the eccle- markable part of this extraordinary story, gentlemen, is, that the pack was ruined from that day out; for they would ever hunt ofterward but mice."

CHAPTER XXIV.

MURPHY's story was received with acclamation by all but the little man.

"That is all a pack of nonsense," said he. "Well, you're welcome to it, sir," said Murphy, "and if I had greater nonsense you should have it; but seriously, sir, I again must beg you to remember that the country all around here abounds in enchantment; scarcely a night passes without some fairy frolic; but,

however you may doubt the wonderful fact of the cat speaking, I wonder you are not impressed with the points of moral in which the story abounds-" "Fiddlestick!" said the miniature snarler. "First, the little touch about the corn monopoly*then maternal vanity chastised by the loss of the child's toe-then Tom's familiarity with his cat, showing the danger arising from a man making too free with his female domestics-the historical point about the penal "'Ow!-elegant!' says Tom;- we'll have a brave laws-the fatal results of letting the cat out o' the bag, with the curious final fact in natural history." "It's all nonsense," said the little man, "and I am ashamed of myself for being such a fool as to sit a-lis-"Well, off Tom went home; and he was racking his tening to such stuff instead of going to bed, after the to-morrow, to be in good time at the polling."

"Oh! then you're going to the election, sir?" said Murphy. "Yes, sir-there's some sense in that-and you, gentlemen, remember we must be all up early-and I recommend you to follow my example. The little man rung the bell-the bootjack and slippers were called for, and, after some delay, a very sleepy-looking gossoon entered with a bootjack under his arm, but no slippers.

"Didn't I say slippers?" said the little man.
"You did, sir."

"Where are they, sir?" "The masther says there isn't any, if you plaze, sir."

* Handy Andy was written when the "vexed question" of the "Corn Laws" was the all-absorbing sub-

"No slippers! and you call this an inn? Oh!-well, 'what can't be cured must be endured '-hold me the bootjack, sir." The gossoon obeyed—the little man inserted his heel in the cleft, but, on attempting to pull his foot from the boot, he nearly went heels over head backward. Murphy caught him and put him on his legs again.

"Heads up, soldiers," exclaimed Murtough; "! thought you were drinking too much."

"Sir, I'm not intoxicated!" said the mannikin, snappishly. "It is the fault of that vile bootjack—what sor of a thing is that you have brought?" added he in rage to the gossoon.

"It's the bootjack, sir; only one 'o the horns is gona you see," and he held up to view a rough piece of board with an angular slit in it, but one of "the horns," as it called it, had been broken off at the top, leaving the ac ticle useless.

"How dare you bring such a thing as that?" said the little man, in a great rage.

"Why, sir, you ax'd for a bootjack, sure, and I brought you the best I had-and it's not my fault it's bruk, so it is, for it wasn't me bruk it, but Biddy b'atin' the cock."

"Beating the cock!" repeated the little man, in surprise. "Bless me! beat a cock with a bootjack!-what savages!"

"Oh, it's not the hen cock I mane, sir," said the gossoon, "but the beer cock-she was b'atin' the cock into the barrel, sir, wid the bootjack, sir." "That was decidedly wrong," said Murphy; "a bootjack is better suited to a heel-tap than a full measure." "She was tapping the beer, you mean?" said the lit-

"Faix, she wasn't tapping it at all, sir, but hittin' it

"Barbarians!" exclaimed the little man; "using a bootjack instead of a hammer!" "Sure the hammer was gone to the priest, sir; bekase

he wanted it for the crucifixion." "The crucifixion!" exclaimed the little man, horri-fled; "is it possible they crucify people?" "Oh no, sir!" said the gossoon, grinning, "it's the picthure I main, sir—an illigant picthure that is hung up in the chapel, and he wanted a hammer to dhrive the nails-" "Oh, a picture of the cruciflxion," said the little

"Yes, sure, sir-the alther-piece, that was althered for to fit to the place, for it was too big when it came down from Dublin, so they cut off the sides where the sojers was, bekase it stopt out the windows, and wouldn't l'ave a bit o' light for his riverence to read mass; and sure the sojers were no loss out o' the altherpiece, and was hung up afther in the vesthery, and serve them right, the blackguards. But it was sore agen our will to cut off the ladies at the bottom, that was cryin' and roarin'; but great good luck, the head o' the Blessed Virgin was presarved in the corner, and sure it's beautiful to see the tears runnin' down her face, just over the hole in the wall for the holy wather -which is remarkable."

The gossoon was much offended by the laughter that followed his account of the altar-piece, which he had no intention of making irreverential, and suddenly became silent, with a muttered "More shame for yiz;" and as his bootjack was impracticable, he was sent off with orders for the chambermaid to supply bed candles immediately. The party soon separated for their various dormitories, the little man leaving sundry charges to call them early in the morning, and to be sure to have hot water ready for shaving, and, without fail, to have their boots polished in time and left at their room doors -to all which injunctions he severally received the answer of, "Certainly, sir;" and as the bed-room doors were slapped to, one by one, the last sound of the retiring party was the snappish voice of the indefatigable little man, shouting, ere he shut his door,-" Earlyearly-don't forget, Mistress Kelly-early!"

A shake-down for Murphy in the parlor was hastily prepared; and after Mrs. Kelly was assured by Murtough that he was quite comfortable, and perfectly conscores of apologies, with lamentations it was no better. etc., etc., the whole household retired to rest, and in about a quarter of an hour the inn was in perfect si-

Then Murtough cautiously opened his door, and after listening for some minutes, and being satisfied he was the only watcher under the roof, he gently opened one of the parlor windows and gave the preconcerted signal which he and Dick had agreed upon. Dick was under the window immediately, and after exchanging a few words with Murtough, the latter withdrew, and taking off his boots, and screening with his hand the light of a candle he carried, he cautiously ascended the stairs, and proceeded stealthily along the corridor of the dormitory, where, from the chambers on each side, a concert of snoring began to be executed, and at all the doors stood the boots and shoes of the inmates awaiting the aid of Day and Martin in the morning. But, oh! innocent calf-skins—destined to a far different fate-not Day and Martin, but Dick the Devil and Company are in wait for you. Murphy collected as many as he could carry under his arms and descended with them to the parlor window, where they were transferred to Dick, who carried them directly to the horsepond which lay behind the inn, and there committed them to the deep. After a few journeys up and down stairs, Murtough had left the electors without a morsel of sole or upper leather, and was satisfied that a considerable delay, if not a prevention of their appearance at the poll on the morrow, would be the consequence.

"There, Dick," said Murphy, "is the last of them," as he handed the little man's shoes out of the window -"and now, to save appearances, you must take mine too-for I must be without boots as well as the rest in the morning. What fun I shall have when the uproar begins-don't you envy me, Dick? There, be off now; but hark'e, notwithstanding you take away my boots, you need not throw them into the horse-

"Faith, an' I will," said Dick, dragging them out of his hands; "'twould not be honorable, if i didn't-I'd give two pair of boots for the fun you'll have.

"Nonsense, Dick-Dick, I say-my boots!" "Honor!" cried Dick, as he vanished round the corns, "That devil will keep his word," muttered Murphy, as he closed the window-"I may bid good-hy to that pair of boots-bad luck to him!" And yet the merry attorney could not help laughing at Dick making him a sufferer by his own trick.

Dick did keep his word; and after, with particular delight, sinking Murphy's boots with the rest, he, as it tive little man, when the kitchen maid, handing the was preconcerted, returned to the cottage of Barny, basting-ladle to Andy, begged him to do a good turn and with his assistance drew the upset gig from the and just to baste the beef for her, for that her heart ditch, and with a second set of harness, provided for was broke with all she had to do, cooking dinner for so the occasion, yoked the servant's horse to the vehicle many.

and drove home.

the inn; and lest the loss of the boots and shoes might | the little man; but at last, getting confused with some not be productive of sufficient impediment to the move- very crabbed questions put to him, Andy became comments of the enemy he determined on venturing a step | pletely bothered, and lifting a brimming ladle of dripfurther. The heavy sleeping of the weary and tipsy ping, poured it over the little man's coat instead of the travelers enabled him to enter their chambers unob- beef. served, and over the garments they had taken off he | A roar from the proprietor of the clothes followed, poured the contents of the water-jug and water-bottle and he implanted a kick at such advantage upon Andy, he found in each room, and then laying the empty bot- that he upset him into the dripping-pan; and Andy, in tle and a tumbler on a chair beside each sleeper's bed, his fall, endeavoring to support himself, caught at the he made it appear as if the drunken men had been dry suspended articles above him, and the clothes, and the in the night, and, in their endeavors to cool their thirst, had upset the water over their own clothes. The clothes of the little man, in particular, Murphy took especial delight in sousing more profusely than his neighbor's, and not content with taking his shoes, burnt electors up-stairs were holding a council whether it his stockings, and left the ashes in the dish of the would not be better to send back the "honorable's" candlestick, with just as much unconsumed as would show what they had been. He then retired to the parlor, and with many an internal chuckle at the thought of the morning's hubbub, threw off his clothes and at the time, and roared at each other through their water myself, for my mouth is as dhry as a lime-burnflinging himself on the shake-down Mrs. Kelly had pro- doors, which were purposely left open that they might er's wig—and I on the top o' their house—see—there's vided for him, was soon wrapt in the profoundest slum- enjoy each other's conversation; number seven replied the little blaze again-I wonder is their chimbly aftreber, from which he never awoke until the morning to number three, and claimed respect to his arguments. Oh! murther, I'll die o' thirst-oh! if I had only one uproar of the inn aroused him. He jumped from his on the score of seniority; the blue room was completely dhrop o' wather-I wish it would rain or hail-Hail, lair and rushed to the scene of action, to soar in the controverted by the yellow; and the double-bedded Mary, full o' grace-whisht! what's that?" Andy storm of his own raising; and to make it more apparent room would, of course, have had superior weight in the couched lower than before, as he saw a figure rise from that he had been as great a sufferer as the rest, he only argument, only that everything it said was lost by the earth, and attain a hight which Andy computed threw a quilt over his shoulders and did not draw on his the two honorable members speaking together. The to be something about twenty feet; his heart shrunk to stockings. In this plight he scaled the stairs and joined French king used to hold a council called a "bed of the size of a nutshell, as he beheld the mouster expand the storming party, where the little man was leading justice," in which neither justice nor a bed had any- to his full dimensions; and at the same moment, a the forlorn hope, with his candlestick in one hand and the remnant of his burnt stocking between the finger served the title than any council the Bourbon ever asand thumb of the other.

landlord.

The landlord could only stare. "Bless me!" cried Murphy, "how drunk you must have been to mistake your stocking for an extinguisher!"

"Drunk, sir—I wasn't drunk!" "It looks very like it," said Murphy, who did not wait for an answer, but bustled off to another party who was his boots. "I never seen them, sir," said the boy.

"I left them at my door," said the man. "So did I leave mine," said Murphy, "and here I am harefooted-it is most extraordinary.

"Has the house been robbed?" said the innocent elector.

"Not a one o' me knows, sir!" said the boy; "but how could it be robbed and the doors all fast this rnornin'?"

The landlady now appeared, and fired at the word

"robbed!" "Robbed, sir!" exclaimed Mrs. Kelly; no, sir-no one was ever robbed in my house-my house is respectable and responsible, sir-a vartuous house-none o' your rantipole places, sir, I'd have you to know, but decent and well behaved, and the house was as quiet as a lamb all night." "Certainly, Mrs. Kelly," said Murphy-"not a more respectable house in Ireland-I'll vouch for that."

"You're a gentleman, Misther Murphy," said Mrs. Kelly, who turned down the passage, uttering indignant ejaculations in a sort of snorting manner, while her words of anger were returned by Murphy with expressions of soothing and condolence as he followed her down-stairs.

shouted and swore and complained, Murphy gave his had received a good thrashing once for being caught night wind swept across the heath at the moment, and over their own clothes. To repeat this idea to them- "the stranger" told him to do so. "What does he mand, which only rendered his denuded state more hi- pace only; and when he appeared without the electors, her-" dicrous. To him Murphy asserted his belief that the a storm burst on poor Andy. whole affair was enchantment, and ventured to hope the small individual would have more faith in fairy machinations for the future, to which the little abortion only returned his usual "Pho! pho! nonsense!"

Through all this scene of uproar, as Murphy passed to and fro, whenever he encountered the landlord. that worthy individual threw him a knowing look; and the exclamation of, "Oh, Misther Murphy-by dad!" given in a low chuckling tone, insinuated that the landlord not only smoked, but enjoyed the joke. "You must lend me a pair of boots, Kelly," said

"To be sure, sir-ha! ha! ha!-but you are the quare man, Misther Murphy-"

Murtough.

"Send down the road and get my gig out of the ditch ' "To be sure, sir. Poor devils! purty hands they got into," and off went the landlord, with a chuckle,

The messengers sent for the gig returned, declaring there was no gig to be seen anywhere.

Murphy affected great surprise at the Intelligence again went among the bamboozled electors, who were all obliged to go to bed for want of clothes; and his bitter lamentations over the loss of his gig almost reconciled them to their minor troubles.

To the fears they expressed that they should not be able to reach the town in time for polling that day, Murphy told them to set their minds at rest, for they would be in time on the next. He then borrowed a saddle as well as the pair of boots from the landlord, and the little black mare bore Murphy triumphantly back to the town, after he had securely impounded Scatterbrain's voters, who were anxiously and hourly expected by their friends. Still they came not. At last, Handy Andy, who happened to be in town with Scatterbrain, was dispatched to hurry them, and his orders were not to come back as he knew the country well, the shades of evening, without them. in bed, and all the fires in the house employed in drying sure, for he had ridden upward of thirty miles that their clothes. The little man, wrapped in a blanket, day, so the merry whistle, which is so constantly heard was superintending the cooking of his own before the from the lively Irish pedestrian, did not while away the kitchen grate; there hung his garments on some crose tedium of his walk. It was night when Andy was sticks suspended by a string, after the fashion of s breasting up a low ridge of hills, which lay between he; 'No,' says I; 'but I have an article!' 'What article?' roasting-jack, which the small gentleman turned befora him and the end of his journey; and when in silence says he; 'It's a fine brass blunderbuss, says I, 'and a blazing turf fire; and beside this contrivance of his and darkness he topped the ascent, he threw himself I'd like to see the man would dispute the title!" swung a goodly joint of meat, which a bouncing kitchen on some heather to rest and take breath. His attenwench came over to baste now and then.

Andy, always ready to oblige, consented, and plied Murphy, meanwhile, was bent on more mischief at the ladle actively between the troublesome queries of beef, and Andy, all swam in gravy.

CHAPTER XXV.

WHILE disaster and hubbub were rife below, the messenger to the town and request a supply of shoes, which they had no other means of getting. The debate was of an odd sort; they were all in their several beds thing to do, so that this Irish conference better de- second, equally large, emerged from the ground. sembled. The debate having concluded, and the ques-"Look at that, sir!" he cried, as he held it up to the tion being put and carried, the usher of the black counterpane was desired to get out of bed, and, wrapped in the robe of office whence he derived his title, to go down-stairs and call the "Honorable's" messenger to the "bar of the house," and there order him a pint of porter, for refreshment after his ride; and forthwith to send him back again to the town for a supply of shoes, The house was unanimous in voting the supplies.

The usher reached the kitchen and found Andy in his ringing out his inexpressibles at the door of his bed, shirt sleeves, scraping the dripping from his livery room, and swearing at the gossoon that he must have with an old knife, whose hackled edge considerably assisted Andy's own ingenuity in the tearing of his coat in many places, while the little man made no effort toward the repair of his garment, but held up before him, and regarded it with a piteous look.

To the usher of the black counterpane's question, whether Andy was the "Honorable's messenger," Andy replied in the affirmative; but to the desire expressed, that he would ride back to the town, Andy re- | spoke. turned a decided negative.

"My ordhers is not to go back without you," said Andy.

"But we have no shoes," said the usher; "and cannot go until we get some.

"My ordher is not to go back without you."

"But if we can't go?"

"Well, then, I can't go back, that's all," said Andy. The usher, the landlord, and the landlady all hainmered away at Andy for a long time, in vain trying to convince him be ought to return, as he was desired; still Andy stuck to the letter of his orders, and he said he often got into trouble for not doing exactly what he was bid, and that he was bid "not to go back without them, and he would not—so he wouldn't—divil a fut."

At last, however, Andy was made to understand the devils to make their fires; there was no doubt what propriety of riding back to the town; and was desired to go as fast as his horse could carry him, to gallop The storm still continued above, and while there they | every foot of the way; but Andy did no such thing; he ferring that the men were drunk and poured the water intention of running the risk a second time, because pure breath. selves he re-ascended, but the men were incredulous. know about it?" said Andy to himself; "faith, it's fair again Andy lost what his atrocious desires were—

"There! I knew how it would be," said he, "and not whom he spoke, and Andy shuddered. "The monsters!

my fault at all,"

"Weren't you told not to return without them?" "But wait till I tell you how it was, sure;" and then Andy began an account of the condition in which the voters lay at the inn; but between the impatience of those who heard, and the confused manner of Andy's recital, it was some time before matters were explained: and then Andy was desired to ride back to the inn again, to tell the electors shoes should be forwarded after him in a post-chaise, and requesting their utmost exertions in hastening over to the town, for that the election | his diaphragm. was going against them. Andy returned to the inn; and this time, under orders from headquarters, galloped in good earnest, and brought in his horse smoking hot, and indicating lameness. The day was wearing apace, and it was so late when the electors were enabled to start that the polling-booths were closed before they could leave the town; and in many of these booths the requisite number of electors had not been polled that day to keep them open; so that the next day nearly all those outlying electors, about whom there had been so much trouble and expense, would be of no avail. Thus, my thumb (hiccop). I can crush him when I pl'ase." Murphy's trick was quite successful, and the poor pickled electors were driven back to their inn in dud-

Andy, when he went to the stable to saddle his steed. for a return to Neck-or-Nothing Hall, found him dead lame, so that to ride him better than twelve miles home was impossible. Andy was obliged to leave him where he was, and trudge it to the hall; for all the horses in Kelly's stables were knocked up with their day's work. As it was shorter by four miles across the country than by the road, Andy pursued the former course; and Handy, on his arrival at the inn, found the electors least. Andy was not very fresh for the journey to be so big. tion was suddenly caught by a small blue flame, which the spell of supernatural terror which had hung over

Andy was answering some questions of the inquisi- flickered now and then on the face of the hill, not very far from him; and Andy's fears of fairies and goblins came crowding upon him thick and fast. He wished to rie, but could not; his eye continued to be strained with the fascination of tear in the direction he saw tho fire, and sought to pierce the gloom through which, at intervals, the small point of flame flashed brightly and sunk again, making the darkness seem deeper. Andy lay in perfect stillness, and in the silence, which was unbroken even by his own breathing, he thought he heard voices underground. He trembled from head to foot, for he was certain they were the voices of the fairies, whom he firmly believed to inhabit the hills.

"Oh! murdher, what 'il I do?" thought Andy to himself; "sure I heerd often, if once you were within the sound of their voices you could never get out o' their power. Oh! if I could only say a pather and ave. but I forget my prayers with the fright. Hail, Mary! The king o' the fairies lives in these hills, I knowand his house is undher me this minit, and I on the roof of it-I'll never get down again-I'll never get down again-they'll make me slater to the fairies, and sure enough I remember me, the hill is all covered with flat stones they call fairy slates. Oh! I am ruined—God be praised!" Here he blessed himself, and laid his head close to the earth. "Guardian angels-I hear their voices singin' a dhrinking song—oh! if I had a dhrop o'

Now, as fairies are notoriously little people, Andy changed his opinion of the parties into whose power he had fallen, and saw clearly they were giants, not fairies, of whom he was about to become the victim. He would have ejaculated a prayer for mercy, had not terror rendered him speechless, as the remembrance of all the giants he had ever heard of, from the days of Jack and the Bean-Stalk down, came into his head; but though his sense of speaking was gone, that of hearing was painfully acute, and he heard one of the giants

"That pot is not big enough."

"Oh! it howlds as much as we want," replied the other. "Oh Lord," thought Andy; "they've got their pot ready for cooking. "What keeps him?" said the first giant. "Oh, he's not far off," said the second.

A claiming shivering came over Andy. "I'm hungry," said the first, and he hiccuped as he

"It's only a false appetite you have," said the second, "you're drunk."

This was a new light to Andy, for he thought giants were too strong to get drunk. "I could ate a young child, without parsley and but ther," said the drunken giant. Andy gave a faint sparmodie kiek.

"And it's as hot as ——— down there," said the giant. Andy trembled at the horrid word he heard.

"No wonder," said the second giant; "for I can see the flame popping out at the top of the chimbly; that's bad: I hope no one will see it, or it might give them warning. Bad luck to that young divil for making the fire so sthrong." What a dreadful hearing this was for Andy: young place they were dwelling in. "Thunder and turf," says the drunken giant; "I wish I had a slice of-" Andy did not hear what he wished a slice of, for the notion of the catastrophe to the landlady below, in- gatloping his master's horse on the road, and he had no carried away the monster's disgusting words on its "Well, I'd rather have-" said the other giant; and

The little man he found buttoning on a pair of black and aisy I'll go, and not disthress the horse to plaze "than all the other slices in the world. What a lovely gaiters, the only serviceable decency he had at his com- any one." So he went back his ten miles at reasonable | round shoulder she has, and the nice round ankle of The word "ankle" showed at once it was a woman of > to eat a woman. "What a fool you are to be in love," said the drunken giant, with many hiccups, showing the increase of his > inehriation. "Is that what the brutes call love," thought Andy, "to eat a woman?"

> "I wish she was bone of my bone and flesh of my flesh," said the second giant. Of this speech Andy heard only "bone" and "flesh," > and had great difficulty in maintaining the serenity of

The conversation of the glants was now more frequently interrupted by the wind which was rising, and only broken sentences reached Andy, whose senses became clearer the longer he remained in a state of safety; at last he heard the name of Squire Egan distinctly pass between the giants. "So they know Squire Egan," thought Andy.

The first giant gave a drunken laugh at the mention of Squire Egan's name, and exclaimed:

"Don't be afraid of him (hiccup); I have him under "Oh! my poor owld Masther!" mentally ejaculated Andy.

Another break in their conversation occurred, and the next name Andy overheard was "O'Grady." "The big bully!" said the second giant.

"They know the whole country," thought Andy. "But tell me, what was that you said to him at the election?" said the drunken one.

The word "election" recalled Andy to the business of this earth back again; and it struck upon his hitherto bewildered sensorium that giants could have nothing to do with elections, and he knew he never saw them there; and, as the thought struck him, it seemed as if which were now closing round, did not deter him in the the giants diminished in size, and did not appear quits

"Sure you know," said the second. "Well, I'd like to hear it again," said the drunken one (hiccup). "The big bully says to me, 'Have you a lease?' says

The drunken listener chuckled, and the words broke

Andy; he knew, by the words of the speaker, it was the hully joker of the election was present, who browbeat O'Grady and out-quibbled the agent about the oath of allegiance; and the voice of the other he soon recogand with such odds as two to one against him he thought in the sheriff's face. he had better be quiet. Besides, his curiosity became excited when he found them speaking of his old master, Egan, and his present one, O'Grady; and as a woman had been alluded to, and odd words caught up here and there, he became anxious to hear more of their conversation. "So you're in love," said Larry, hal hal you big fool."

"Well, you old thief, don't you like a purty girl your-

"I did, when I was young and foolish."

"Faith, then, you're young and foolish at that rate yet, for you're a rogue with the girls, Larry," said the other, giving him a slap on the back.

try: "he! he!—how do you know, eh?" (Hiccup.) amity. "Sure, I know myself; but as I was telling you, if I

"And you'd carry her off?" said Larry.

"I would," said the other; "I'm only afraid o' Squire or so." Egan."

At this announcement of the intention of "carrying her off," coupled with the fear of "Squire Egan," so intense that he crawled cautiously a little nearer to the speakers.

"I'tell you again," said Larry, "I can settle him aisy (hiccup)—he's undher my thumb (hiccup)." thought this was a mere drunken delusion of Larry's.

"I tell you I'm his masther!" said Larry, with a drunken flourish of his arm; and he continued bragging on the hope of the future. of his power over the squire in various ejaculations, the could not fathom, but Andy heard enough to show him Larry alluded to.

That Larry, a close, cunning, circumventing rascal, should so far betray the source of his power over Egan may seem strange; but be it remembered Larry was drunk, a state of weakness which his caution generally marded him from falling into, but which being in, his i lible was bragging of his influence, and so running the visk of losing it.

The men continued to talk together for some time, and the tenor of the conversation was that Larry assured his companion he might carry off the girl without fear of Egan, but her name Andy could not discover. His own name he heard more than once, and voluptuous raptures poured forth about lovely lips and hips and ankles from the herculean knight of the blunderbuss, amidst the maudlin admiration and hiccups of Larry, who continued to brag of his power, and profess his readiness to stand by his friend in carrying off the girl.

"Then," said the Hercules, with an oath, "I'll soon have you in my arms, my lovely-" The name was lost again.

Their colloquy was now interrupted by the approach of a man and woman, the former being the person for his cravat. While she was getting it from his warddiately. She then disappeared through the ground, an: the men all followed.

Andy drew his breath freely once more, and with caution raised himself gradually from the ground with a careful circumspection, lest any of the subterranean community might be watchers on the hill; and when he was satisfied he was free from observation, he stole away from the spot with stealthy steps for about twenty paces, and there, as well as the darkness would permit, after taking such landmarks as would help him to retrace his way to the still, if requisite, he dashed down the hill at the top of his speed. This pace he did not moderate until he had placed nearly a mile between him and the scene of his adventure; he then paced slowly to regain his breath. His head was in a strange whirl; mischief was threatened against some one of of start, that six or seven hundred-" whose name he was ignorant; Squire Egan was declared to be in the power of an old rascal; this grieved Andy most of all, for he felt that he was the cause of his old master's dilemma.

"Oh! to think I should bring him into trouble," said Andy, "the kind and good masther he was to me ever, and I live to tell it like a blackguard—throth I'd rather be hanged any day than the masther would come to 'that as well as you," said O'Grady; "but I hope we throuble-maybe if i gave myself up and was hanged shall get as much for all that." like a man at once, that would settle it; faith, if I thought it would, I'd do it sooner than Squire Egan should come to throuble!" and poor Andy poke just what he felt. "Or would it do to kill that binekguard Hogan? sure they could do no more than hang me after," and that would save the masther, and be all one to me, for they often tould me I'd be hanged. But then there's my sowl," said Andy, and he paused at droll-the notion of a man gaining Paradise through a the thought; "if they hanged me for the letthers, it mistake. Our intentions too seldom lead us there, but broken dish, the oysters, and Andy, as they all rolled would be only for a mistake, and sure then I'd have a rather tend the other way, for a certain place is said to one over the other to the bottom. chance o' glory; for sure I might go to glory through a be paved with "good" ones, and surely "bad" ones mistake; but it I killed a man on purpose, sure it would would not lead us upward. Then the phrase of a man be slappin' the gates of Heaven in my own face. Faix, Ill spake to Father Blake about it."+"

* How often has the sanguinary penal code of past door" is every-day and common; but when applied to years suggested this reflection and provoked the guilt "the gates of Heaven," and "in a man's own face," the sounded high and low. it was meant to awe! Happily, now our laws are common phrase becomes fine. But how often the comanider, and more protective from their mildness.

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE following day was that eventful one which should now to wonder, "who talks of oysters?" witness the return of either Edward Egan Esq., or the Honorable Sackville Scatterbrain, as member for the hundred of oysters!" nized for that of Larry Hogan. So now his giants were county. There was no doubt in any reasonable man's diminished into mortal men-the pot, which had been mind as to the real majority of Egan, but the numbers mentioned to the terror of his soul, was for the making were sufficiently close to give the sheriff an oppor of whisky instead of human broth—and the "hell" he tunity of doing a bit of business to oblige his friends, thought his giants inhabited was but a private still. and therefore he declared the Honorable Sackville Andy felt as if a mountain had been lifted from his Scatterbrain duly elected. Great was the uproar; the heart when he found it was but mortals he had to deal people hissed, and hooted, and groaned, for which the and dinners, too, on the expectation of less than six with; for Andy was not deficient in courage when it Honorable Sack ville very good naturedly returned was but thews and sinews like his own he had to ent them his thanks. Murphy snapped his fingers in the for sending people into the Insolvent Court than the counter. He still lay concealed, however, for smug-sheriff's face, and told him his honorable friend should aforesaid expectation." glers might not wish their private haunt to be discov- not long remain member, for that he must be unseated cred, and it was possible Andy would be voted one too no petition, and that he would prove the return most many in the company should be announce himself; corrupt, with which words he again snapped his fingers.

The sheriff threatened to read the riot act if such conduct was repeated. Egan took off his hat, and thanked him for his honorable, upright, and impartial conduct, whereupon all Egan's friends took off their hats also, and made profound bows to the functionary, and then laughed most with a hiccup, to our friend of the blunderbuss; "ha! uproariously. Counter laughs, were returned from the opposite party, who begged to remind the Eganites of the old saying, "that they might laugh who win." A cross-fire of sarcasms was kept up amidst the two parties as they were crushing forward out of the courthouse; and at the door, before entering his carriage, Scatterbrain very politely addressed Egan, and trusted that, though they had met as rivals on the hustings, "Not II not I!" said Larry, in a manner expressive they nevertheless parted friends, and expressing the of his not being displeased with the charge of gallan- highest respect for the squire, offered his hand in

Egan, equally good-heatred as his opponent, shook could only lay howld of-" here his voice became in- his hand cordially; declaring he attributed to him none audible to Andy, and the rest of the sentence was lost. of the blame which attached to other persons. "Besides, Andy's curiosity was great. "Who could the girl my dear sir," said Egan laughing, I should be a very ill-natured person to grudge you so small an indulgence as being a member of parliament for a month

Scatterbrain returned the laugh, good-humoredly, and replied that, "at all events, he had the seat."

"Yes, my dear sir," said Egan, "and make the most Andy's anxiety to hear the name of the person became of it while you have it. In short, I shall owe you an obligation when I go over to St. Stephen's for you will brain, eager to help him, flourished his oyster-knife; have just aired my seat for me-good-by."

They parted with smiles, and drove to their respective homes; but as even doubtful possession is prefer-"Be aisy," said the other, contemptuously, who able to expectation for the time being, it is certain that Neck-or-Nothing Hall rung with more merriment that night on the reality of the present, than Merryvale did

Even O'Grady, as he lay with his wounded arm on exact meaning of which our friend of the blunderbuss, the sofa, found more healing in the triumph of the hour than from all the medicaments of the foregoing week, that the discovery of the post-office affair was what, and insisted on going down-stairs and joining the party

"Gusty dear," said his wife, "you know the doctor

"Hang the doctor!"

"Your arm, my love." "I wish you'd leave off pitying my arm, and have father. some compassion on my stomach.

"The doctor said-" "There are oysters in the house; I'll do myself more good by the use of an oyster-knife than all the lancets in the College of Surgeons."

"But your wound, dear?" "Are they Carlingfords or Poldoodies?"

"So fresh, love." "So much the better."

"Your wound I mean, dear." "Nicely opened."

"Only dressed an hour ago?"

"With some mustard, pepper, and vinegar,"

"Indeed, Gusty, if you take my advice-

"I'd rather have oysters any day." O'Grady sat up on the sofa as he spoke and requested his wife to say no more about the matter, but put on whose appearance Larry made so many inquiries when robe, his mind wandered from supper to the pension, he first appeared to Andy as the hungry giant; the which he looked upon as secure now that Scatterbrain | cwy-I love her dear little moustaches, I do," He other was the sister of the knight of the blunderbuss was returned; and oyster-banks gave place to the Bank gave a gentle pat on the back of the neck as he spoke, Larry having hiccuped his anger against the man for of Ireland, which rose in a pleasing image before and it was returned by an uncommonly smart box on making them wait so long for the bacon, the woman said O'Grady's imagination. The wife now returned with the ear from the young lady, and the whole party he should not wait longer without his supper now, for the cravat, still dreading the result of eating to her looked thunderstruck. "Dear Gussy" cried for spite, that she would go down and fry the rashers imme- husband, and her mind occupied wholly with the and stamped her way out of the room, followed by thought of supper, while O'Grady was wrapt in visions | Furlong.

> of a pension. "You won't take it, Gusty, dear," said his wife, with all the insinuation of manner she could command. "Won't I, faith?" said O'Grady. "Maybe you think

I don't want it?"

"Indeed, I don't, dear." "Are you mad, woman? Is it taking leave of the few senses you ever had you are?" "'T won't agree with you."

"Won't it? just wait till I'm tried." "Well, love, how much do you expect to be allowed?" "Why, I can't expect much just yet-we must begin gently-feel the pulse first; but I should hope, by way

"Gracious Heaven!" exclaimed his wife, dropping the cravat from her hand.

"What the devil is the woman shouting at?" said O'Grady. "Six or seven hundred!!!" exclaimed Mrs. O'Grady:

"my dear, there's not as much in the house." "No, nor has not been for many a long day; I know

"My dear, where could we get them?" asked the wife, timidly, who began to think his head was a little

"From the treasury, to be sure." "The treasury, my dear?" said the wife, still at fault; "how could you get oysters from the treasury?"

"slapping the gates of Heaven in his own face," is one of those wild poetic figures of speech in which the Irish monest things become poetry by the fitness of their ing a quaint pleasantry, for it is partly true as well as minds think greatness of thought lies in big words.

"Oysters!" exclaimed O'Grady, whose turn it was

"My dear, I thought you said you'd eat six or seven

"Pooh! pooh! woman; it is of the pension I'm talking-six or seven hundred pounds-pounds-cash-per annum; now I suppose you'll put on my cravat. I think a man may be allowed to eat his supper who expects six hundred a year."

A great many people besides O'Grady order suppers, hundred a year. Perhaps there is no more active agent

O'Grady went down-stairs, and was heartily welcomed by Scatterbrain on his re-appearance from his sick-room; but Mrs. O'Grady suggested, that, for fear and excess would send him back there for a longer time, a very moderate indulgence at the table should suffice. She begged the honorable member to back her argument, which he did; and O'Grady promised temperance, but begged the immediate appearance of the oysters, for he experienced that eager desire which delicate health so often prompts for some particular food.

Andy was laying the table at the time, and was ordered to expedite matters as much as possible.

"Yis, ma'am." "You're sure the oysters are all good, Andy?"

"Sartin, ma'am." "Because the last oysters you know-"

"Oh, yis, ma'am-were bad, ma'am-hekase they had their mouths all open. I remember, ma'am; but when I'm towld a thing once, I never forget it again: and you towld me when they opened their mouths once they were no good. So you see, ma'am, I'll never bring up bad oysthers again, ma'am."

"Very good, Andy; and you have kept them in a ceol place, I hope." "Taix, they're cowld enough where I put them, ma'am. "Very well; bring them up at once."

Off went Andy, and returned with all the haste he could with a large dish heaped up with oysters.

O'Grady rubbed his hands with the impatience of a true lover of the crustaceous delicacy, and Scatterbut before he had time to commence operations the olfactory nerves of the company gave evidence that the oysters were rather suspicious; every one began sniffing, and a universal "Oh dear!" ran round the table.

"Don't you smell it, Furlong?" said Scatterbrain, who was so lost in looking at Augusta's mustaches that he did not mind anything else.

"Isn't it horrid?" said O'Grady, with a look of disgust. Furloug thought he alluded to the mustache, and replied with an assurance that he "liked it of all things."

"Like it?" said O'Grady; "you've a queer taste. What do you think of it, miss?" added he to Augusta.

"it's just under your nose." Furlong thought this rather personal, even from a

"I'll try my knife on one," said Scatterbrain, with a flourish of the oyster-knife, which Furlong thought resembled the preliminary trial of a barber's razor.

Furlong thought this worse than O'Grady; but he hesitated to reply to his chief, and an honorable into the bargain. In the meantime, Scatterbrain opened an oyster, which Furlong, in his embarrassment and annoyance, did not perceive.

"Cut off the beard," said O'Grady, "I don't like it." This nearly made Furlong speak, but, considering O'Grady's temper and ill-health, he hesitated, till he saw Augusta rubbing her eye, in consequence of a small splinter of the oyster-shell having struck it from Scatterbrain's mismanagement of his knife; but Furlong thought she was crying, and then he could be silent no longer; he went over to where she sat, and with a very affectionate demonstration in his action, said, "Never mind them, dear Gussy-never mind-don't "Let them go," said O'Grady; "they'll make it up

"These oysters are all bad," said Scatterbrain. O'Grady began to swear at his disappointment—he had set his heart on oysters. Mrs. O'Grady rung the bell—Andy appeared. "How dare you bring up such oysters as these?" roared O'Grady. "The misthris ordhered them, sir."

"I told you never to bring up bad oysters," said she.

"Them's notibad, ma'am," said Andy. "Have you a nose?" says O'Grady.

"Yes, sir." "And can't you smell them, then?"

"Faix, I smelt them for the last three days, sir," "And how could you say they were good, then?" asked his mistress.

"Sure you told me, ma'am, that if they didn't open their mouths they were good, and I'll be on my book oath them oysters never opened their mouths since I had them, for I laid them on a cool flag in the kitchen and put the jack-weight over them."

Notwithstanding O'Grady's rage, Scatterbrain could not help roaring with laughter at Andy's nevel contrivance for keeping oysters fresh. Andy was desired to take the "ancient and fish-like smell" out of the room, amidst jeers and abuse; and, as he fumbled his way to the kitchen in the dark, lamenting the bad fate of ser vants, who can never give satisfaction, though they do everything they are bid, he went head over heels downstairs, which event was reported to the whole house as soon as it happened, by the enormous clatter of the O'Grady, having missed the cool supper he intended. and had longed for, was put into a rage by the disap pointment; and as hunger with O'Grady was only to be appeased by broiled bones, accordingly, against all the peasantry often indulge. The phrase "slapping the endeavors of everybody, the bells rung violently through

The reader is sufficiently well acquainted with O'Grady by this time to know, that of course, when once he † In the foregoing passage, Andy stumbles on utter- application, though poetasters and people of small had determined to have his broiled bone, nothing on the face of the earth could prevent it but the want of any.

thing to broil, or the immediate want of his teetle; and as his masticators were in order, and something in the house which could carry mustard and pepper, the invalid primed and loaded himself with as much combustible matter as exploded in a fever the next day.

The supper-party, however, in the hope of getting him to bed, separated soon; and as Scatterbrain and Furlong were to start early in the morning for Dublin, the necessity of their retiring to rest was pleaded. The honorable member had not been long in his room when he heard a tap at his door, and his order to "come in" was followed by the appearance of Handy Andy.

"I found somethin" on the road nigh the town to-day, sir, and I thought it might be yours, maybe," said andy, producing a small pocket-book.

i with ble member disavowed the ownership. ' v. '), ther something else I want to speak to your honor about."

"What is it, Handy?" "I want your honor to see the account of the money your honor gave me that I spint at a shebeen* upon the bethors that couldn't be accommodated at Mrs. 1 47 54 13

Oh! never mind it, Andy; if there's anything over, 'keep it yourself."

"Thank your honor, but I must make the account all the same, if you plaze, for I'm going to Father cience as clear as I can, and I wouldn't like to be a. eping money back."

"But if I give you the money, what matter?" "I'd rather you'd just look over this little bit of a upon it.

the same time if he wrote it. made out I put down myself too, and that's it you see, sir, both 'ating and dhrinkin'."

To Dhrinkin A blinD piper everry day wan and in Pens six dais 0 16 6 To atein four Tin Hilkthurs And 1 1 8 8 Thare horses on Chewsdal . . 5 0 14 0

10 18 121 2

"Then I owe you money, instead of your having a balance in hand, Andy," said the member.

"Oh, no matter, your honor; it's not for that I showed you the account. "It's very like it, though," said Scatterbrain, laughing; "here, Andy, here are a couple of pounds for you, take them, Andy-take it and be off; your bill is worth the money," and Scatterbrain closed the door on the great accountant.

Andy next went to Furlong's room, to know if the pocket-book belonged to him; it did not, but Furlong, though he disclaimed the ownership, had that small curiosity which prompts little minds to pry into what does not belong to them, and taking the pocket-book ento his hands, he opened it, and fumbled over its teaves; in the doing of which a small piece of folded paper fell from one of the pockets unnoticed by the impertment inquisitor or Andy, to whom he returned the book when he had gratified his senseless curiosity.

Andy withdrew, Furlong retired to rest; and as it was in the gray of an autumnal morning he dressed nimself, the paper still remained unobserved; so that the housemaid, on setting the room to rights, found it, and fancying Miss Augusta was the proper person to confide Mr. Furlong's stray papers to, she handed that young lady the manuscript which bore the following copy of verses:

I CAN NEEER FORGET THEE.

It is the chime, the hour draws near When you and I must sever; Alas, it must be many a year, And it may be for ever! How long till we shall meet again! How short since first I met thee! How brief the bliss-how long the pain-For I can ne'er forget thee,

You said my heart was cold and stern; You doubted love when strongest; In future days you'll live to learn Proud hearts can love the longest. Oh! sometimes think, when press'd to hear When flippant tongues beset thee, That all must love thee, when thou'rt near But one will ne'er forget thee.

The changeful sand doth only know The shallow tide and latest; The rocks have mark'd its highest flow, The deepest and the greatest. And deeper still the flood-marks grow-So, since the hour I met thee, The more the tide of time doth flow, The less can I forget thee.

When Augusta saw the lines, she was charmed. She discovered her Furlong to be a poet. That the lines were his there was do doubt-they were found in his room, and of course they must be his, just as partial critics say certain Irish airs must be English, because they are to be found in Queen Elizabeth's music-book.

Augusta was so charmed with the lines that she our story. amused herself for a long time in hiding them under but in a lady's hand.

he was barking for another run with the verses, receives lines from ladies." "I think I know the hand too," said Charlotte.

· Low public-house

"You do?" exclaimed Augusta, with flashing eyes. "Yes; I'm certain it is Fanny Dawson's writing." "So it is," said Augusta, looking at the paper as if there before he came here."

the flame she had raised. " But I've heard that girl always makes conquests at first sight," returned Augusta, half crying; "and what do I see here? some words in peneil." The words were so faint as to be scarcely perceptible, but Augusta deciphered them; they were written on the margin, beside a cirumitex which embraced the Oh! sometimes think, when press'd to hear, \ Dearest, I

Well.

When flippaut tongues beset thee, That all must love thee when thou'rt near,

But one will ne'er forget thee! "Will you, indeed?" said Augusta, crushing the paper in her hand, and biting it; "but I must not destroy it-I must keep it to prove his treachery to his face." She throw herself on the sofa as she spoke, and gave vent to an outpour of spiteful tears.

CHAPTER XXVII.

How many chapters have been written about love verses-and how many more might be written-might Blake, to my duty, t soon, and I must have my con- would, could, should, or ought to be written-I will venture to say, will be written. I have a mind to fulfil my own prophecy and write one myself; but no-my story must go on. However, I will say, that it is quite curious in how many ways the same little bit of paper 'count, if you plaze," said Andy, producing a dirty piece | may influence different people; the poem whose literary of paper, with some nearly inscrutable hieroglyphics | merit may be small becomes precious when some valued hand has transcribed the lines; and the verses whose Scatterbrain commenced an examination of this liter- measure and meaning viewed in type might win favor ary phenomenon from sheer curiosity, asking Andy at and yield pleasure shoot poison from their very sweetness when read in some particular hand and under par- the very pink of fans; it had quivers and arrows upon "Yis, sir," said Andy; "but you see the man couldn't | ticular circumstances. It was so with the copy of it, and bunches of hearts looped up in azure festoons, keep the 'count of the piper's dhrink at all, it was so 'verses Augusta had just read-they were Fanny Dawconfusin', and so I was obliged to pay him for that son's manuscript-that was certain, and found in the every time the piper dhrunk, and keep it separate, and room of Augusta's lover; therefore Augusta was the lecthors that got their dinner afther the bill was wretched. But these same lines had given exquisite pleasure to another person, who was now nearly as miserable as Augusta in having lost them. It is possible the reader guesses that person to be Edward O'Connor, for it was he who had lost the pocket-book in which those (to him) precious lines were contained; and if the little case had held all the Lank-notes he ever are in quizzing you about a little something, I won't say owned in his life their loss would have been regarded less than that bit of manuscript, which had often yielded him the most exquisite pleasure, and was now · inflicting on Augusta the bitterest angui of

To make this intelligible to the reader it is necessary to explain under what circumstances the lines were written. At one time, Edward, doubting the likelihood of making his way at home, was about to go to India and push his fortunes there; and at that period those lines, breathing of farewell-implying the dread of rivals during absence-and imploring remembrance of his eternal love, were written and given to Fanny; and she, with that delicacy of contrivance so peculiarly a woman's, but upon the expedient of copying his an indication that the spirit of the lines was her own.

But Edward saw that his father, who was advanced in years, looked upon a separation from his son as an eternal one, and the thought gave so much pain that Edward gave up the idea of expatriation. Shortly after, however, the misunderstanding with Major Dawson took place, and Fanny and Edward were as much severed as if dwelling in different zones. Under such circumstances those lines were peculiarly precions, and many a kiss had Edward impressed upon them, though Augusta thought them fitter for the exercise of her teeth than her lips. In fact, Edward did little else than think of Fanny; and it is possible his passion might have degenerated into mere love-sickness, and enfeebled him, had not his desire of proving himself worthy of his mistress spurred him to exertion in the hope of future distinction. But still the tone of tender lament pervaded all his poems, and the same pocketbook whence the verses which caused so much commotion fell contained the following also, showing how entirely Fanny possessed his heart and occupied his thoughts:

WHEN THE SUN SINKS TO REST.

When the sun sinks to rest, And the star of the west Sheds its soft silver light o'er the sea; What sweet thoughts arise, As the dim twilight dies-For then I am thinking of thee! Oh! then crowding fast Come the joys of the past, Through the dimness of days long gone by. Like the stars pecping out, Through the darkness about, From the soft silent depth of the sky,

And thus, as the night Grows more lovely and bright With the clust'ring of planet and star, So this darkness of mine Wins a radiance divine From the light that still lingers afar. Then welcome the night, With its soft holy light!

In its silence my heart is more free The rude world to forget, Where no pleasure I've met

Since the hour that I parted from thee.

But we must leave love verses, and ask pardon for the few remarks which the subject tempted, and pursue the blackness of that fluid-most appropriately made of from different countries. The Northerns retain resort the best galls-the time so spent, and the "letting of words," if I may use the phrase, has cooled our judgment and our passions together; and the first letter is her eyes could have burnt it; "to be sure-he was torn: 'tis too severe; we write a second; we blot and interline till it is nearly illegible; we begin a third; till "Only for two days," said Charlotte, trying to slake at last we are tired out with our own angry feelings, and throw our scribbling by with a "Pshaw1 what's the use of it?" or, "It's not worth my notice;" or, still better, arrive at the conclusion, that we preserve our own dignity best by writing with temper, though we may be called upon to be severe.

Furlong at this time was on his road to Dublin in happy unconsciousness of Augusta's rage against him, last four lines of the second verse, so that it stood thus: and planning what pretty little present he should send her specially, for his head was naturally running on such matters, as he had quantities of commissions to execute in the millinery line for Mrs. O'Grady, who thought it high time to be getting up Augusta's wedding-dresses, and Andy was to be despatched the following day to Dublin, to take charge of a cargo of bandboxes back from the city to Neck-or-Nothing Hall. Furlong had received a thousand charges from the ladies, "to be sure to lose no time" in doing his devoir in their behalf, and he obeyed so strictly, and was so active in laying milliners and mercers under contributions, that Andy was enabled to start the day after his arrival, sorely against Andy's will, for he would gladly have remained amidst the beauty and grandeur and wonders of Dublin, which struck him damb for the day he was amongst them, but gave him food for conversation for many a day after. Eurlong, after racking his invention about the souvenir to his "dear Gussy," at length fixed on a fan, as the most suitable gift; for Gussy had been quizzed at home about "blushing," and all that sort of thing, and the puerile perceptions of the attache saw something very smart in sending her wherewith "to hide her blushes," Then the fan was and doves perched upon them; though Augusta's little sister, who was too young to know what hearts and doves were, when she saw them for the first time, said they were pretty little birds picking at apples. The fan was packed up in a nice case, and then on scented note paper did the dear dandy indite a bit of nambypamby badinage to his fair one, which he thought excessively clever:-

"DEAR DUCKY DARLING:-You know how naughty they what, you will guess, I dare say-but I send you a little toy, I won't say what, on which Cupid might write this label after the doctor's fashlon, 'To be used occasionally, when the patient is much troubled with the symptoms."

"Ever, ever, ever yours, "J. F." "P.S.-Take care how you open it."

Such was the note that Handy Andy was given, with particular injunctions to deliver it the first thing on his arrival at the Hall to Miss Augusta, and to be sure to take most particular care of the little case; all which Andy faithfully promised to do. But Andy's usual destiny prevailed, and an unfortunate exchange of parcels quite upset all Furlong's sweet little plan of his protty present and his ingenious note: for as Andy was just taking his departure, Furlong said he might as own verses and sending them to him in her writing, as | well leave something for him at Reade's, the cutler, as he passed through College Green, and he handed him a case of razors which wanted setting, which Andy popped into his pocket, and as the fan case and that of the razors were much of a size, and both folded up, Andy left the fan at the cutlers and took the case of razors by way of present to Augusta. Fancy the rage of a young lady with a very fine pair of moustuckies getting such a souvenir from her lover, with a note, too, every word of which applied to a beard and a razor, as patly as to a blush and a fan-and this, too, when her jealousy was aroused and his fidelity more than doubtful in her estimation.

Great was the row in Neck-or-Nothing Hall; and when, after three days, Furlong came down, the nature of his reception may be better imagined than described. It was a difficult matter, through the storm which raged around him, to explain all the circumstances satisfactorily, but, by dint of hard work, the verses were at length disclaimed, the razors disavowed, and Andy at last sent for to "clear matters up."

Andy was a hopeful subject for such a purpose, and by his blundering answers nearly set them all by the cars again; the upshot of the affair was, that Andy, used as he was to good scoldings, never had such a torrent of abuse poured on him in his life, and the affair ended in Andy being dismissed from Neck-or-Nothing Hall on the instant; so he relinquished his greasy livery for his own rags again, and trudged homewards to his mother's cabin.

"She'll be as mad as a hatter with me," said Andy; "bad luck to them for razhirs, they cut me out o' my place; but I often heard cowld steel is unlucky, and sure I know it now. Oh! but I'm always unfort nate in having cruked messages. Well, it can't be helped; and one good thing at all events is, I'll have time enough now to go and spake to Father Blake;" and with this sorry piece of satisfaction poor Andy contented himself.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THE Father Blake, of whom Andy spoke, was more familiarly known by the name of Father Phil, by which title Andy himself would have named him, had he been telling how Father Phil cleared a fair, or equally "leathered" both the belligerent parties in a factionfight, or turned out the contents (or malcontents) of a public-house at an improper hour; but when he spoke of his Reverence respecting ghostly matters, the importance of the subject begot higher consideration for the man, and the familiar "Father Phil" was dropped for the more respectful title of Father Blake. By either title, or in whatever capacity, the worthy Father had great influence over his parish, and there was a free-and-easy way with him, even in doing the most The first prompting of Augusta's anger, when she solemn duties, which agreed wonderfully with the the sofa-cushion and making her pet dog find and fetch had recovered her burst of passion, was to write "such devil-may-care spirit of Paddy. Stiff and starched forthem. Her pleasure, however, was interrupted by her a letter" to Furlong-and she spent half a day at the mality in any way is repugnant to the very nature of sister Charlotte remarking, when the lines were shown work; but she could not please herself-she tore twenty I frishmen; and I believe one of the surest ways of conto ner in triumph, that the writing was not Furlong's, at least, and determined at last not to write at all, but verting all Ireland from the Romish faith would be just wait till he returned and overwhelm him with re- found, if we could only manage to have her mass cele-Even as beer is suddenly soured by the thunder, so proaches. But, though she could not compose a letter, brated with the dry coldness of the Reformation. This the electric influence of Charlotte's words converted she composed herself by the endeavor, which acted as may seem ridiculous at first sight, and I grant it is a all Augusta had been brewing to acidity; jealousy a sort of safety-valve to let off the superabundant grotesque way of viewing the subject, but yet there stung her like a wasp, and she boxed her dog's ears as steam; and it is wonderful how general is this result may be truth in it; and to consider it for a moment of sitting down to write angry letters: people vent seriously, look at the fact, that the north of Ireland is "A lady's hand?" said Augusta, snatching the paper themselves of their spleen on the uncomplaining the stronghold of Protestantism, and that the north is from her sister: "I declare if it aint! the wretch-so he paper, which silently receives words a listener would the least Irish portion of the island. There is a strong not. With a pen for our second, desperate satisfac- admixture of Scotch there, and all who know the countion is obtained with only an effusion of ink, and try will admit that there is nearly as much difference when once the pent-up bitterness has oozed out in all between men from the north and south of Ireland as of the cold formality and unbending hardness of the against you every Sunday, which is condemning you buried an old husband, and, by all accounts, was cockstranger-settlers from whom they are descended, while before your faces, and behind your backs too, for don't ing her capiat a handsome young fellow in the parish. the Southerns exhibit that warm-hearted, lively, and I see this minit a strame o' wather that might turn a poetical temperament for which the country is cele- mill running down Micky Mackavoy's back, between brated. The prevailing national characteristics of Ire- | the collar of his coat and his shirt?" land are not to be found in the north, where Protest- |. Here a laugh ensued at the expense of Micky Mackantism flourishes; they are to be found in the south avoy, who certainly was under a very heavy drip from and west, where it has never taken root. And though the imperfect roof, it has never seemed to strike theologians, that in their "And is it laughing you are, you haythens?" said very natures some people are more adapted to receive Father Phil, reproving the merriment which he himone faith than another, yet I believe it to be true, and self had purposely created, that he might reprove perhaps not quite unworthy of consideration. There it. "Laughing is it you are at your backslidings are forms, it is true, and many in the Romish church, and insensibility to the honor of God-laughing, bebut they are not cold forms, but attractive rather, to a cause when you come here to be saved you are lost sensitive people; besides, I believe those very forms, intirely with the wet; and how, I ask you, are my when observed the least formally, are the most influen- words of comfort to enter your hearts, when the tial on the Irish; and perhaps the splendors of a High rain is pouring down your backs at the same time? Mass in the gorgeous temple of the Holy City would Sure I have no chance of turning your hearts while appeal less to the affections of an Irish peasant than you are undher rain that might turn a mill-but the service he witnesses in some half-thatched ruin by once put a good roof on the house, and I will inuna lone hill-side, familiarly hurried through by a priest | date you with piety! Maybe its Father Dominick you who has sharpened his appetite by a mountain ride of | would like to have coming among you, who would grind some fifteen miles, and is saying mass (for the third your hearts to powdher with his heavy words." (Here time most likely) before breakfast, which consumma- a low murmur of dissent ran through the throng.)

⁺ Confession.

stances, that Father Blake was celebrating the mass at to my moderate reproofs, you hard-hearted haythenswhich Andy was present, and after which he hoped to you malefacthors and cruel persecutors, that won't obtain a word of advice from the worthy Father, who put your hands in your pockets, because your mild was much more sought after on such occasions than and quiet poor fool of a pasthor has no tongue in his more sedate superior who presided over the spir- his head!-I say your mild, quiet, poor fool of a pasthor itual welfare of the parish-and whose solemn celebra- (for I know my own faults partly, God forgive me!) and tion of the mass was by no means so agreeable as the I can't spake to you as you deserve, you hard-living lighter service of Father Phil. The Rev. Dominick vagabonds, that are as insensible te your duties as you Dowling was austere and long-winded; his mass had are to the weather. I wish it was sugar or salt you an oppressive effect on his congregation, and from the | were made of, and then the rain might melt you if I kneeling multitude might be seen eyes fearfully look- couldn't; but no-them naked rafters grin in your face | we don't take care. ing up from under bent brows; and low breathings and to no purpose-you chate the house of God; but take subdued groans often rose above the silence of his con- care, maybe you won't chate the divil so aisy"-(here gregation, who felt like sinners, and whose imagina- there was a sensation). "Ha! ha! that makes you tions were filled with the thoughts of Heaven's anger; open your ears, does it? More shame for you; you while the good-humored face of the light-hearted ought to despise that dirty enemy of man, and depend Father Phil produced a corresponding brightness on on something betther-but I see I must call you to a the looks of his hearers, who turned up their whole sense of your situation with the bottomless pit undher faces in trustfulness to the mercy of that Heaven you, and no roof over you. Oh, dear! dear!-I'm whose propitiatory offering their pastor was making ashamed of you-troth, if I had time and straw enough, for them in cheerful tones, which associated well with I'd rather thatch the place myself than lose my time thoughts of pardon and salvation.

like a strong dark stream that swept down the hearer- like a stable!-for though our Redeemer, in his humilhopelessly struggling to keep his head above the tor- ity, was born in a stable, that is no reason why you rent, and dreading to be overwhelmed at the next are to keep his house always like one. word. Father Phil's religion bubbled out like a mountain rill-bright, musical, and refreshing. Father Dominick's people had decidedly need of cork jackets; Father Phil's might drink and be refreshed.

But with all this intrinsic worth, he was, at the same time, a strange man in exterior manners; for, with an abundance of real piety, he had an abruptness of delivery and a strange way of mixing up an occasional remark to his congregation in the mildst of the celebration of the mass, which might well startle a stranger; but this very want of formality made him beloved by the people, and they would do ten times as nuch for Father Phil as for Father Dominick.

On the Sunday in question, when Andy attended the chapel, Father Phil intended delivering an address to his flock from the altar, urging them to the necessity of bestirring themselves in the repairs of the chapel, which was in a very dilapidated condition, and at one end let in the rain through its worn-out thatch. -A subccription was necessary; and to raise this among a very impoverished people was no easy matter. The weather happened to be unfavorable, which was most favorable to Father Phil's purpose, for the rain dropped its arguments through the roof upon the kneeling people below in the most convincing manner; and as they endeavored to get out of the wet, they pressed round the altar as much as they could, for which they were reproved very smartly by his Reverence in the very midst of the mass, and these interruptions occurred sometimes in the most serious places, producing a ludicrous effect, of which the worthy Father was quite unconscious in his great anxiety to make the people repair the chapel.

A big woman was elbowing her way toward the rails of the altar, and Father Phil, casting a sidelong glance at her, sent her to the right-about, while he interrupted his appeal to Heaven to address her thus:

Agnus Del-you'd better jump over the rails of the althar, I think. Go along out o' that, there's plenty o' room in the chapel below there."

Then he would turn to the altar and proceed with the service, till turning again to the congregation he perceived some fresh offender.

"Orate fratres!—will you mind what I say to you and go along out o' that? there's room below there. Thrue for you, Mrs. Finn-it's a shame for him to be thramplin'on you. Go along, Darby Casy, down there, and kneel in the rain; it's a pity you haven't a dacent woman's cloak undher you indeed!-Orate fratres!"

Then would the service proceed again, and while he prayed in silence at the altar, the shuflling of feet edging out of the rain would disturb him, and casting a backward glance, he would say:

"I hear you there-can't you be quiet and not be disturbin' the mass, you haythens?"

Again he proceeded in silence, till the crying of a child interrupted him. He looked round quickly. "You'd better kill the child, I think, thramplin' on him, Lavery. Go out o' that-your conduct is scandalous-Dominus vobiscum!" Again he turned to pray, and after some time he made an interval in the service to address his congregation on the subject of the repairs, and produced a paper containing the names of subscribers to that pious work who had already contributed, by way of example to those who had not. "Here it is," said Father Phil, "here it is, and no denying it-down in black and white; but if they who give are down in black, how much blacker are those who have not given at all!-but I hope they will be ashamed of themselves when I howld up those to honor who have contributed to the uphowlding of the house of God. And isn't it ashamed o' yourselves you ought to be, to leave His house in such a condition—and doesn't it rain a'most every Sunday, as if He wished to remind you of your duty? aren't you wet to the skin a'most every Sunday? Oh, God is good to you! to put you in mind of your duty, giving you such bitther cowlds widow woman gives more than you." that you are coughin and sneezin' every Sunday to that degree that you can't hear the blessed mass for a | has no childhre." comfort and a benefit to you; and so you'll go on "That's not her fault," said the priest-"and maybe forts for my poor husband, who was dying in the tion of his morning's exercise he is anxious to arrive at. "Ha! ha! so you wouldn't like it, I see. · Very well, It was just in such a chapel, and under such circum- very well-take care, then; for if I find you insensible talking to you; sure the place is more like a stable than Father Dominick poured forth his spiritual influence a chapel. Oh, think of that!—the house of God to be

"And now I will read you the list of subscribers and it will make you ashamed when you hear the names of several good and worthy Protestants in the parish, and out of it, too, who have given more than the Catholics."

He then proceeded to read the following list, which he interlarded copiously with observations of his own; making viva voce marginal notes, as it were, upon the subscribers, which were not unfrequently answered by is Kitty Crow I see, getting her bit of silver ready; them the persons so noticed, from the body of the chapel, and laughter was often the consequence of these rejoinders, which Father Phil never permitted to pass without a retort. Nor must all this be considered in the least irreverent. A certain period is allowed between two particular portions of the mass, when the priest may address his congregation on any public matter; an approaching pattern, or fair, or the like, in which exhortations to propriety of conduct, or warnings against faction fights, etc., are his themes. Then they only listen in reverence. But when a subscription for such an object as that already mentioned is under discussion, the flock consider themselves entitled to "put in a word" in case of necessity.

This preliminary hint is given to the reader, that he may better enter into the spirit of Father Phil's

SUBSCRIPTION LIST.

FOR THE REPAIRS AND ENLARGEMENT OF BALLYSLOUGH-GUTPHERY CHAPEL,

PHILIP BLAKE, P. P.

Micky Hicky. 0 7 6 "He might as well have made ten shillings; but half a loaf is better than no bread." "Plase your reverence," says Mick, from the body of the chapel, "sure seven and sixpence is more than the half of ten shillings." (A laugh). "Oh! how witty you are. Faith, if you knew your duty as well as your arithmatic, it would be betther for you, Micky." Here the Father turned the laugh against Mick.

"Of course he means to subscribe again."

"That's something like! I'll be bound he's only keeping back the odd five shillings for a brush full o' paint for the althar; it's as black as a crow, instead o' being as white as a dove."

He then hurried over rapidly some small subscribers

Mat Donovan. Jack_Quigly. 0 Pat Finnegan.

Edward O'Connor, Esq. 2 0 0
"There's for you! Edward O'Connor, Esq., a Protestant in the parish-Two pounds!"

"Long life to him," cried a voice in the chapel. "Amen," said Father Phil; "I'm not ashamed to be clerk to so good a prayer."

Nicholas Fagan, . . . 0 2 6 Young Nicholas Fagan, . . 0 5 0

"Young Nick is better than owld Nick, you see." The congregation honored the Father's demand on their risibility.

"Well done, Owny na Coppal-you deserve to prosper, for you make good use of your thrivings."

Simon Leary, 0 2 6
Bridget Murphy, . . . 0 10 0

"You ought to be ashamed o' yourself, Simon: a lone cheezin' until you put a good thatch on the place, and she'll mend o' that yet." This excited much merri-prevent the appearance of the evidence from Heaven, ment, for the widow was buxom, and had recently she spoke.

£ s. d. Judy Moylan, . . . 0 5 0

"Very good, Judy; the women are behaving like gentlemen; they'll have their reward in the next world."

"I'm not sure if it is 8s. 4d. or 8s. 4d., for the figure is blotted—but I believe it is 8s. 4d." "It was three and four pince I gave your reverence," said Pat from the crowd. "Well, Pat, as I said eight and four pence you must not let me go back o' my word, so bring me five shillings next week." "Sure you wouldn't have me pay for a blot, wir?" "Yes, I would-that's the rule of back-mannon, you know, Pat. When I hit the blot, you pay for it."

Here his reverence turned round, as if looking for some one, and called out, "Rafferty! Rafferty! Rafferty! Where are you, Rafferty?"

An old gray-headed man appeared, bearing a large plate, and Father Phil continued—

"There now, be active-I'm sending him among you, good people, and such as cannot give as much as you would like to be read before your neighbors, give what little you can toward the repairs, and I will continue to read out the names by way of encouragement to you, and the next name I see is that of Squire Egan. Long life to him!"

"Squire Egan - five pounds - listen to that-five pounds—a Protestant in the parish—five pounds! Faith, the Protestants will make you ashamed of yourselves, it James Milligan, of Roundtown 1 0 0 "And not her own parish, either—a kind lady.

Mrs. Flanagan, . . . 2 0 0 "And here I must remark that the people of Roundtown have not been backward in coming forward on this occasion. I have a long list from Roundtown-I will read it separate." He then proceeded at a great pace, jumbling the town, and the pounds, and the people in a most extraordinary manner: "James Milligan of Roundtown, one pound; Darby Daly of Roundtown, one pound; Sam Finnegan of Roundtown, one pound; James Casey of Roundpound, one town; Kit Dwyer of Townpound, one round-pound I mane: Pat Roundpound-Pounden, I mane-Pat Pounden, a pound. of Poundtown also-there's an example for you!-but what are you about, Rafferty! I don't like the sound of that plate of yours: -you are not a good gleaner-go up first into the gallery there, where I see so many goodlooking bonnets—I suppose they will give something to keep their bonnets out of the rain, for the wet will be into the gallery next Sunday if they don't. I think that ribbons of yours cost a trifle, Kitty. Well, good Christians, here is more of the subscription for you.

Matthew Lavery, . . . 0 2 6

"He doesn't belong to Roundtown-Roundtown will be renowned in future ages for the support of the Church. Mark my words-Roundtown will prosper from this day out-Roundtown will be a rising place.

> Mark Hennessy, . . . Luke Clancy, John Doolin,

"One would think they all agreed only to give two and sixpence apiece. And they comfortable men, too! And look at their names-Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, the names of the Blessed Evangelists, and only ten shillings among them! Oh, they are apostles not worthy of the name-we'll call them the Poor Apostles from this out" (here a low laugh ran through the chapel)-"Do you hear that, Matthew, Mark. Luke. and John? Faith! I can tell you that name will stick to you." (Here the laugh was louder.)

A voice, when the laugh subsided, exclaimed, "I'll make it ten shillin's, your reverence." "Who's that?" said Father Phil. "Hennessy, your reverence."

"Very well, Mark. I suppose Matthew, Luke, and John will follow your example?"

"We will, your reverence." "Ah! I thought you made a mistake; we'll call you now the Faithful Apostles-and I think the change in the name is betther than seven and sixpence apiece to

"I see you in the gallery there, Rafferty. What do you pass that well-dressed woman for?—thry back—ha! -see that-she had her money ready if you only asked for it-don't go by that other woman there-oh, oh |-So you won't give anything, ma'am. You ought to be ashamed of yourself. There is a woman with an elegant sthraw bonnet, and she won't give a farthing. Well now-afther that-remember-I give it from the althar, that from this day out sthraw bonnets pay fi'penny

Thomas Durfy, Esq., . . 1 0 0 "It's not his parish and he's a brave gentleman. Miss Fanny Dawson, . . 1 0 0

"A Protestant out of the parish, and a sweet young lady, God bless her! Oh, faith the Protestants is shaming youll!

"Very good, indeed, for a working mason."

"Not bad for a hedge-carpenther." "I gave you ten, plaze, your reverence," shouted Jemmy, "and by the same token, you may remember it was on the Nativity of the Blessed Vargin, sir, I gave you the second five shillin's."

"So you did, Jemmy," cried Father Phil-"I put a little cross before it to remind me of it; but I was in a hurry to make a sick call when you gave it to me, and forgot it afther: and indeed myself doesn't know what I did with that same five shillings."

Here a pallid woman, who was kneeling near the rails of the altar, uttered an impassioned blessing, and ex-Simon answered, "I have a large family, sir, and she claimed, "Oh, that was the very five shillings, I'm sure, you gave to me that very day to buy some little comdock into silence.

on Irish as embly, and scarcely credible to a stranger, against horses, a slip of bog against a gravel-pit, or a reason dinner should be spoiled, he'd be there soon I subscription list had passed away and was for lime-kilu sometimes burns stronger than the flame of ter he should have good meat cold, than everybody stood in altered relations-they were again a reverent comparison with a good flock of geese-and a love-sick cindhers, the beef boiled to rags, and the chickens be flock, and he once more a solemn pastor; the natural sigh less touching than the healthy grunt of a good all in jommethry." play of his nation's mirthful sarcasm was absorbed in pig; indeed, the last-named gentleman is a most useful. So down they they sat to dinner: its heat, its mirth, a moment in the sacredness of his office; and with a agent in this traile, for when matters are nearly its clatter, and its good cheer, we will not attempt to solemnity befitting the highest occasion, he placed his poised, the balance is often adjusted by a grunter or two describe; suffice it to say, the viands were good, the Heaven he poured forth his sweet voice, with a tone of 'state of debate, quarrels sometimes occur between the Father Phil, no bad judge of such matters, declared he the deepest devotion, in that reverential call to prayer, plovers; the gentleman's caution sometimes takes alarm, never pronounced grace over a better spread. But " Orale, fratres."

The sound of a multitude gently kneeling down fol-I swed like the soft breaking of a quiet sea on a sandy beach; and when Father Philip turned to the altar to is upset and left in the mire. pray, his pent-up feelings found vent in tears; and while he prayed, he wept.

currence in Ireland; that country so long-suffering, so | a marriage-bargain was broken off, because the lover was not unmoved; a cloud hung on his brow, which much maligned, and so little understood.

scribed antecedent to the woman in the outbreak of of some weeks, met her swain at a neighboring fair, eatables, and the copious jugs of punch going their he recoiled-suppose the mirthfulness of the incidents re-illumined by the sight of his charmer, who, on the happy pair could not be given, for one of them was abarising from the reading of the subscription-list—a contrary, had become quite disgusted with him for his sent. Father Phil hardly knew what to do; for even mirthfulness bordering on the ludicrous—to have been too obvious preference of profit to true affection. He his overflowing cheerfulness began to forsake him, and recorded, and nothing more, a stranger would be in- addressed hear softly in a tent, and asked her to dance, a certain air of embarrassment began to pervade the clined to believe, and pardonable in the belief, that the but was most astonished at her returning him a look whole assembly, till Jack Dwyer could bear it no longer, Irish and their priesthood were rather prone to be ir- of vacant wonder, which tacitly implied, "Who are and, standing up, he thus addressed the company: reverent; but observe, under this exterior, the deep you?" as plain as looks could speak. sources of feeling that lie hidden and wait but the wand of divination to be revealed. In a thousand similar ways are the actions and the motives of the Irish understood by those who are careless of them; or worse, misrepresented by those whose interest, and too often business, it is to malign them.

Father Phil could proceed no further with the reading of the subscription-list, but finished the office of man that was courtin' and in love you?" the mass with unusual solemnity. But if the incident just recorded abridged his address, and the publication with a curl of her rosy lip, which displayed the pearly a man of desperate determination. "He's a greedy of donors' names by way of stimulus to the less active, teeth to whose beauty her woman's nature rejoiced chap, the same James Casey, and he loves his bargain it produced a great effect on those who had but that the recreant lover was yet insensible—"You're betther than he loves you, Matty, so don't look glum smaller donations to drop into the plate; and the gray—under a mistake, young man," and her hightened color about what I'm saying: I say he's greedy: he's just the headed collector, who could have numbered the scanty made her eye flash more brightly as she spoke- fellow that, if you gave him the roof off your house, coin before the bereaved widow had revealed the "You're quite under a mistake-no one was ever in would ax you for the rails before your door; and he pastor's charity, had to struggle his way afterward love with me;" and she laid signal emphasis on the goes back of his bargain now, bekase I would not let brough the eagerly outstretched hands that showered word. "There was a dirty, mane blackguard, indeed, him have it all his own way, and puts the disgrace on their hard-earned pence upon the plate, which was once in love with my father's brown filly, but I forget him me, thinkin' I'll give in to him, through that same; but borne back to the altar heaped with contributions, heap- intirely." ed as it had not been seen for many a day. The studied excitement of their pride and of their shame-and both are active agents in the Irish nature-was less successful than the accidental appeal to their affections.

ed to leat that people by love, whom all your severity than all the horses of Arabia.

has been unable to drive?*

When the mass was over, Andy waited at the door of tain his advice about what he overheard from Larry Hogan; and Father Phil was accordingly accosted by andy just as he he was going to get into his saddle to ride over to breakfast with one of the neighboring farment. The extreme urgency of Andy's manner, as he a certain little farm and cottage, and have the lease desertion. pressed up to the pastor's side, made the latter pause | looked over to see all was right (for Jack Dwyer was and inquire what he wanted.

"I want to get some advice from your riverence," said Andy.

"Faith, then, the advice I give you is never to stop a hugry man when he is going to refresh himself," said Pather Phil, who had quite recovered his usual cheerme to stop here listening to your case, and giving you teeth." advice indeed, when I have said three masses this morning, and rode three miles; how could you be so unreasonable, I. say?"

"I ax your riverence's pardon," said Andy; "I wouldn't have taken the liberty only the thing is mighty particular intirely."

vice: for he is likely to cut his advice on the patthern of his stomach, and it's empty advice you'll get. Did you never hear that a 'hungry stomach has no ears'?"

priest's company to breakfast, exhibited rather more the worthy squire into his villainous power. Andy, un- man he would have chosen as a husband for lis daughimpatience than the good-humored Father Phil, and reder the solemn queries of the priest, positively denied ter; but what could be do? he was taken at his word, proved Andy for his conduct.

"But it's so particular," said Andy. "I wondher you would dar' to stop his riverence, and he black fastin'. Go 'long wid you!"

and speak to me," said Father Phil, riding away. absence of the farmer, who was mounting his own nag | with him, that he would desire Jack Dwyer to ask him | Phil bore witness to the satisfaction he had that day in at the moment, said the matter of which he wished to to dinner. "And that will be no blind nut, let me tell speak involved the interest of Squire Egan, or he you," said Father Phil-"a wedding dinner, you lucky would not "make so bowld."

This altered the matter; and Father Phil desired afther!" Andy to follow him to the farm-house of John Dwyer, where he would speak to him after he had break-lasted.

CHAPTER XXIX.

JOHN DWYER'S house was a scene of activity that day, for not only was the priest to breakfast therealways an affair of honor-but a grand dinner was also was to beld in the house, in honor of Matty Dwyer's duct, "Behave yourself." nuptials, which were to be celebrated that day with a neighboring young farmer, rather well to do in the world. The match had been on and off for some time. for John Dwyer was what is commonly called a "closefisted fellow," and his would-be son-in-law could not bring him to what he considered proper terms, and lynxes-the peevishness of paltry persecutors. † The office of the mass must be performed fasting,

A deep thrill of emotion ran through the flock as this though Matty liked young Casey, and he was fond of The dinner was later than the hour named, and the accidental proof of their poor pastor's beneficence her, they both agreed not to let old Jack Dwyer have | delay arose from the absence of one who, of all others, burst upon them: and as an affectionate murmur be- the best of the bargain in portioning off his daughter, ought to have been present, namely, the bridegroom. gan to rise above the silence which that emotion pro- who, having a spice of her father in her, was just as But James Casey was missing, and Jack Dwyer had duced, the burly Father Philip blushed like a girl at this fond of number one as old Jack himself. And here it is been closeted from time to time with several long-headpublication of his charity, and even at the foot of that worthy of remark, that, though the Irish are so prone ed greybeards, canvassing the occurrence, and wonders altar where he stood, felt something like shame in be- in general to early improvident marriages, no people ing at the default on the bridegroom's part. The pering discovered in the commission of that virtue so are closer in their nuptial barter, when they are in a son who might have been supposed to bear this default highly commended by the Holy One to whose worship | condition to make marriage a profitable contract. Re- the worst, supported it better than any one. Matty the altar was raised. He uttered a hasty "Whisht- peated meetings between the elders of families take was all life and spirits, and helped in making the feast whisht!" and waved with his outstretched hands his place, and acute arguments ensue, properly to equalise ready, as if nothing wrong had happened; and she In an instant one of those sudden changes common to | pans are balanced against pails and churns, cows | once-"that if James Casey was not there, that was no The multitude was hushed—the grotesque, patch of meadow against a bit of a quarry; a little enough; besides, if he didn't arrive in time, it was betgotten, and that same man and that same mullitude Cupid-the doves of Venus herself are but crows in have hot meat spoiled; the ducks would be done to hands together before his breast, and raising his eyes to thrown into either scale. While matters are thus in a guests hungry, and the drink unexceptionable; and and more frequently the lady's pride is aroused at the still, in the midst of the good cheer, neighbors (the too obvious preference given to worldly gain over women particularly) would suggest to each other the heavenly beauty; Cupid shies at Mammon, and Hymen "wondher" where the bridegroom could be; and even

I remember hearing of an instance of this nature, per ran, of "Where in the world is James Casey?" when the lady gave her ci-decant lover an ingenious re- Still the bride kept up her smiles, and cheerfully re-I believe such scenes as this are not of unfrequent oc- proof, after they had been separated some time, when turned the healths that were drunk to her; but old Jack could not obtain from the girl's father a certain brown grew darker and darker as the hour advanced, and the Suppose the foregoing scene to have been only de- filly as part of her dowry. The damsel, after the lapse bridegroom yet tarried. The board was cleared of the her gratitude revealing the priest's charity from which and the flame of love still smouldering in his heart was round; but the usual toast of the united healths of the

"Arrah, Mary," exclaimed the youth.

"Sir!!!"-answered Mary, with what heroines call "ineffable disdain."

"Why one would think you didn't know me!" "If I ever had the honor of your acquaintance, sir," answered Mary, "I forgot you entirely." "Forget me, Mary?-arrah be easy-is it forget the

But no such result as this was likely to take place in | The girl could not resist an exclamation of surprise, his daughter altogether.

However, matters had gone so far that, as the reader | the word.'

Andy was announced to him, and Andy was admitted to a private audience with Father Phil, the particulars of which must not be disclosed; for in short, Andy made a regular confession before the Father, and, we know. confessions must be held sacred; but we may say that Well, I tell you again, never ask a hugry man ad- Andy confided the whole post-office affair to the pastor quite the other way, and he grinned his loutish ad--told him how Larry Hogan had contrived to worm miration of Matty, who turned away her head from him that affair out of him, and by his devilish artifice had, as Andy feared, contrived to implicate Equire Egan in coyness. The farmer, who was to have the honor of the transaction, and, by threatening a disclosure, got and that Hogan could only infer the squire's guilt; one should marry the girl out of hand, and show Casey upon which Father Phil, having perfectly satisfied him- the "disgrace should not be put on him;" but, anxious self, told Andy to make his mind easy, for that he would to have another chance, he stammered something "Gome over to my house in the course of the week, secure the squire from any harm, and he moreover about the fairness of "letting the girl choose," and Andy still persevered, and taking advantage of the ests of his old master, and declared he was so pleased of all was, that no one rose to rival Andy, and Father dog-'lashings* and lavings,' and no end of dancing which the guests began already to gather thick and fast. They strolled about the field before the house. basked in groups in the sunshine, or lay in the shade under the hedges, where hints of future marriages were given to many a pretty girl, and to nudges and pinches were returned small screams suggestive of additional assault—and inviting denials of "Indeed I preparing on a large scale; for a wedding-feast won't," and that crowning provocation to riotous con-

In the meantime, the barn was laid out with long planks, supported on barrels or big stones, which planks, when covered with clean cloths, made a goodl; board, that soon began to be covered with ample wooden dishes of corned beef, roasted geese, boiled chickens and bacon, and intermediate stacks of cabbage and huge bowls of potatoes, all sending up their wreaths of * When this passage was written Ireland was disturb- smoke to the rafters of the barn, soon to become hotter

* Overflowing abundance, and plenty left after.

the worldly goods to be given on both sides. Pots and backed Father Phil's argument to sit down to dinner at within ear-shot of the bride-elect, the low-voiced whis-

"Friends and neighbors, you see the disgrace that's put on me and my child."

A murmur of "No, no!" ran round the board. "I say, yis,"

"He'll come yet, sir," said a voice. "No, he won't," said Jack, "I see he won't-I know he won't. He wanted to have everything all his own way, and he thinks to disgrace me in doing what he likes, but he shan't;" and he struck the table flercely "You're under a mistake, young man," said Mary, as he spoke; for Jack, when once his blood was up, was I won't. And I tell you what it is, friends and neigh-Mary tossed her head proudly as she spoke, and her bors, here's the lease of the three cornered field below filly-fancying admirer, recling under the reproof she there," and he held up a parchment as he spoke, "and inflicted, sneaked from the tent, while Mary stood a snug cottage on it, and it's all ready for the girl to up and danced with a more open-hearted lover, whose walk into with the man that will have her; and if Oh! rulers of Ireland, why have you not sooner learn- carnest eye could see more charms in one levely woman there's a man among you here that's willing, let him say the word now, and I'll give her to him!"

Matty Dwyer's case; she and her lover agreed with one which her father hushed by a word and look so perempthe chapel to catch "his riverence" coming out, and ob- another on the settlement to be made, and old Jack was tory, that she saw remonstrance was in vain, and a ginot to be allowed an inch over what was considered an lence of some moments ensued; for it was rather even bargain. At length all matters were agreed upon, startling, this immediate offer of a girl who had been the wedding-day fixed, and the guests invited; yet still so strangely slighted, and the men were not quite preboth parties were not satisfied, but young Casey pared to make advances, until they knew something iners, who was holding the priest's stirrup at the mo- thought he should be put into absolute possession of inore of the why and wherefore of her sweetheart's

> "Are yiz all dumb?" exclaimed Jack, in surprise. considered rather slippery), while old Jack thought it "Faix, it's not every day a snug little field and cottage time enough to give him possession and the lease and and a good-looking girl falls in a man's way. I say again, I'll give her and the lase to the man that will say has seen, the wedding-feast was prepared, the guests Still no one spoke, and Andy began to think they invited, and Father Phil on the spot to help James and were using Jack Dwyer and his daughter very ill, but falness, and threw his leg over his little gray hack as he Matty (in the facetious parlance of Paddy) to "tie with what business had he to think of offering himself, "a spoke." "How can you be so unreasonable as to expect their tongues what they could not undue with their poor devil like him?" But, the silence still continuing, Andy took heart of grace; and as the profit and pleas-When the priest had done breakfast, the arrival of ure of a snug match and a handsome wife flashed upon him, he got up and said, "Would I do, sir?"

Every one was taken by surprise, even old Jack himself; and Matty could not suppress a faint exclamation, which every one but Andy understood to mean, "she didn't like it at all," but which Andy interpreted in sheer distaste, which action Andy took for mere

Jack was in a dilemma, for Andy was just the last having said one word to Hogan to criminate the squire, and even at the worst he was determined that some praised Andy for the fidelity he displayed to the inter- that "some one else might wish to spake;" but the end finding so much uprightness and fidelity in "the boy;" that he had raised his character much in his estimation by his conduct that day; and if he was a little giddy betimes, there was nothing like a wife to stead, Lim; Andy was accordingly bidden to the bridal feast, to and if he was rather poor, sure Jack Dwyer could mend

"Then come up here," says Jack; and Andy left his place at the very end of the board and marched up to the head, amid clapping of hands and thumping of the table, and laughing and shouting.

"Silence!" cried Father Phil, "this is no laughing matther, but a serious engagement—and, John Dwyer, I tell you-and you, Andy kooney, that girl must not be married against her own free-will; but if she has no objection, well and good." "My will is her pleasure, I know," said Jack, reso-

To the surprise of every one, Matty said, "Oh, I'll take the boy with all my heart." Handy Andy threw his arms round her neck and gave her a most vigorous salute, which came smacking off, and thereupon arose a hilarious shout which made the old rafters of the barn ring again.

"There's the lase for you," said Jack, handing the parchment to Andy, who was now installed in the place of honor beside the bride elect at the head of the table.

ed (as she has too often been) by special parliamentary from the crowd of guests, who, when the word was provocation: the vexations vigilance of legislative given, rushed to the onslaught with right good will.

livening liquor had been performed, the women retired | pocket as he spoke. to the dwelling-house, whose sanded parlor was put This was a degraded clergyman, known in Ireland as to how long he could live-and how much he might nuptial knot between Matty and the adventurous Andy. perform irregular marriages on such urgent occasions

the rites and blessings of the Church dispensed between James Casey of the desperate turn affairs had taken and snug cottage, and down she rushed to embrace each other with thoughts of matrimony.

Under such circumstances it was wonderful with by one still more so. what lightness of spirit Matty went through the try dancers were resting and making love (if fore. making love can be called rest) in the corners, and that the pipers and punch-makers had quite enough to do the "couple-beggar" smothered his objections in until the night was far spent, and it was considered ribald jests. time for the bride and bridegroom to be escorted by a chosen party of friends to the little cottage which was to be their future home. The pipers stood at the threshold of Jack Dwyer, and his daughter departed from under the "roof-tree" to the tune of "Joy be with you;" and then the lilters, heading the body-guard of the bride, plied drone and chanter right merrily until she had entered her new home, thanked her old friends (who did all the established civilities, and cracked all the usual jokes attendant on the occasion); and Andy bolted the door of the snug cottage of which | much men of their word to doubt they would keep | The old woman roared "millia murthur" on the floor, he had so suddenly become master, and placed a seat for the bride beside the fire, requesting "Miss Duyer" lane for some time, and on arriving at the stump of an the proper way to be received in her son's house?" to sit down-for Andy could not bring himself to call old tree, bound him securely to it, and left him to pass "Your son's house, indeed!" cried Matty. "Get out her "Matty" yet-and found himself in an awkward his wedding night in the tight embraces of hemp. position in being "lord and master" of a girl he considered so far above him a few hours before; Matty sat quiet and looked at the fire. "It's very quare, isn't it?" says Andy with a grin, looking at her tenderly, and twiddling his thumbs.

"What's quare?" inquired Matty, very drily. "The estate," responded Andy.

"What estate?" asked Matty. "Your estate and my estate," said Andy.

"Sure you don't call the three-cornered field my "Oh, no," said Andy. "I mane the blessed and hely estate of matrimony the priest put us in possession of;" and Andy drew a stool near the heiress, on the strength of the hit he thought he had made,

"Sit at the other side of the fire," said Matty, very coldly.

"Yes, miss," responded Andy, very respectfully; and in shoving his seat backwards the legs of the stool caught in the earthen floor, and Andy tumbled heels over head.

Matty laughed while Andy was picking himself up with increased confusion at this mishap; for even Rooney, "sure, it's nothin' but trouble and care I have. unidst rustics there is nothing more humiliating than a lover placing himself in a ridiculous position at the moment he is doing his best to make himself agreeable.

"It is well your coat's not new," said Matty, with a contemptuous look at Handy's weather-beaten vest-

"I hope I'll soon have a betther," said Andy, a little piqued with all his reverence for the heiress, at this aliusion to his poverty. "But sure it wasn't the coat you married, but the man that's in it; and sure I'll take off my clothes as soon as you please, Mutty, my dearaliss Dwyer, I mane-I beg your pardon.'

"You had better wait till you get better," answered Matty, very drily. "You know the old saying, 'Don't throw out your dirty wather until you get in fresh.'"

"Ah, darlin', don't be cruel to me!" said Andy, in a supplicating tone. "I know I'm not deservin' of you, but sure I did not make so howld as to make up to you until I seen that nobody else would have you." "Nobody else have me!" exclaimed Matty, as her eyes flashed with anger.

that-" "Say no more about it," said Matty, who recovered her equanimity. "Didn't my father give you the lase of the field and house?"

"Yis, miss."

with me than you."

"Sartainly," said Andy, who drew the lease from his pocket and handed it to her, and—as he was near to her-he attempted a little familiarity, which Matty repelled very unequivocally.

"Arrah! is it jokes you are crackin'?" said Andy, with a grin, advancing to renew his fondling. "I tell you what it is," said Matty, jumping up, "I'll crack your head if you don't behave yourself!" and she seized the stool on which she had been sitting, and brandished it in a very amazonian fashion.

"Oh, wirra! wirra!" said Andy, in amaze-"aren't you my wife?"

" Your wife!" retorted Matty, with a very devil in her eye. " Your wife, indeed, you great omadhaun; why, then, had you the brass to think I'd put up with you bis "Arrah, then, why did you marry me?" said Andy, in a pitiful argumentative whine.

"Why did I marry you?" retorted Matty. "Didn't I know betther than refuse you, when my father said the word when the divil was busy with him? Why did I marry you?-it's a pity I didn't refuse, and be murthered last night, maybe, as soon as the people's backs was turned. Oh, it's little you know of owld Jack smile, and "going the road with a dignified air." Dwyer, or you wouldn't ask me that; but, though I'm

"Oh, Blessed Virgin!" cried Andy; "and what will be the end of it?"

There was a tapping at the door as he spoke. "You'll soon see what will be the end of it," said Matty, as she walked across the cabin and opened to the knock. James Casey entered and clasped Matty in his arms; and half a dozen athletic fellows and one old and debauched-looking man followed, and the door was im- the road screened her from his observation, off she mediately closed after their entry. caressed each other; and the old man said in a voice the good news she had heard. She puffed out by the

"I lost no time the minute I got your message, Matty," said Casey "and here's the Father ready to poim us."

and the punch circulated rapidly in filling to the double | "Ay, ay," cackled the old reprobate-"hammer and speeches to make to the bride; so that the old lady's toast of health, happiness and prosperity to the "hap- tongs!-strike while the iron's hot!-I'm the boy for a piety and flattery ran a strange couple together along by pair;" and after some few more circuits of the en- short job;" and he pulled a greasy book from his with herself; while mixed up with her prayers and her put in immediate readiness for the celebration of the under the title of "Couple-Beggar," who is ready to leure. in half an hour the ceremony was performed, and as the present; and Matty had contrived to inform which commanded a view of the three-cornered field two people, who, an hour before, had never looked on at home, and recommended him to adopt the present her darling Andy and his gentle bride. Puffing and plan, and so defeat the violent measure of her father blowing like a porpoise, bang she went into the cottage,

A scene of uproar now ensued, for Andy did not take honors consequent on a peasant bridal in Ireland; matters quietly, but made a pretty considerable row, blessings. these, it is needless to detail; our limits would not per- which was speedily quelled, however, by Casey's bodymit; but suffice it to say, that a rattling country- guard, who tied Andy neck and heels, and in that helpdance was led off by Andy and Matty in the less state he witnessed the marriage ceremony perbarn, intermediate jigs were indulged in by the formed by the "couple-beggar," between Casey and "picked dancers" of the parish, while the counthe girl he had looked upon as his own five minutes be- she exclaimed in no very gentle tones-

In vain did he raise his voice against the proceedings;

"You can't take her from me, I tell you," cried Andy. "No; but we can take you from her," said the door after them and became possessor of the wife and Rooney's eyes as she reeled backward on the floor. property poor Andy thought he had secured.

Andy was warned on pain of death to be silent as his which had so scientifically tapped it, and wiped her captors bore him along, and he took them to be too hand in her apron. their promise. They bore him through a lonely by and snuffled out a deprecatory question "if that was

CHAPTER XXX.

THE news of Andy's wedding, so strange in itself, and being celebrated before so many, spread over the country like wildfire, and made the talk of half the barony for the next day, and the question, "Arrah, did you hear of the wondherful wedding?" was asked in highroad and by-road, and scarcely a boreen whose hedges shove toward the door. had not borne witness to this startling matrimonial intelligence. The story, like all other stories, of course got twisted into various strange shapes, and fanciful exaggerations became grafted on the original stem, set forth how old Jack Dwyer, the more to vex Casey, had been heard of in the country.

I wish you joy." "Och, hone, and for why, dear?" answered Mrs.

poor and in want, like me." "But sure you'll never be in want any more."

"Arrah, who towld you so, agra?"

"Sure the boy will take care of you now, won't he?"

" What boy?" "Andy, sure!"

"Andy!" replied the mother, in amazement. "Andy, indeed!—out o' place, and without a bawbee to bless himself with—stayin' out all night, the blackguard!"

"By this and that, I don't think you know a word about it," cried the friend, whose turn it was for won-

"Don't I, indeed?" said Mrs. Rooney, huffed at having her word doubted, as she thought. "I tell you he never was at home last night, and maybe it's yourself was helping him, Micky Lavery, to keep his bad coorses—the slingein' dirty blackguard that he is."

creased the ire of Mrs. Rooney, who would have passed on in dignified silence but that Micky held her fast, and when he recovered breath enough to speak, he prohim by direct questions.

sinsible, and don't disthract me-is the boy married?"

"Yis, I tell you." "To Jack Dwyer's daughter?"

" Yis."

"And gev him a fort'n?"

all when the ould man's dead. delight: it's you that is the boy, and the best child that they were Father Phil and Squire Egan. ever was! Half his property, you tell me, Misther

"Yes, ma'am," said Lavery, touching his hat, "and the whole of it when the owld man dies." "Then, indeed, I wish him a happy release!" said Mrs. Rooney, piously-"not that I owe the man any spite-but sure he'd be no loss-and it's a good wish to any one, sure, to wish them in heaven. Good mornin'. Mr. Lavery," said Mrs. Rooney, with a patronising Mick Lavery looked after her with mingled wonder afraid of him, I'm not afraid of you—so stand off I tell and indignation. "Bad luck to you, you owld sthrap!" he muttered beneath his teeth. "How consaited you are, all of a sudden-by Jakers, I'm sorry I towld you -cock you up, indeed-put a beggar on horseback to be sure—humph!—the devil cut the tongue out o' me if it's a black knot, bad luck to it, and must be cut—take ever I give any one good news again. I've a mind to turn back and tell 'Tim Dooling his horse is in the on them-a 'couple-beggar' indeed!" pound,"

Mrs. Rooney continued her dignified pace as long as she was in sight of Lavery, but the moment an angle of set, running as hard as she could, to embrace her dar-Andy stood in amazement while Casey and Matty ling Andy, and realise with her own eyes and ears all tremulous with intoxication, "A very pretty filly, by way many set phrases about the goodness of Providence, and arranged at the same time sundry fine

> * A "happy release" is the Irish phrase for departing this life.

blarney, were certain speculations about Jack Dwyer-

It was in this frame of mind she reached the hill and Matty being the first person she met, she flung herself upon her, and covered her with embraces and

Matty, being taken by surprise, was some time before she could shake off the beldame's hateful caresses; but at last getting free and tucking up her hair, which her imaginary mother-in-law had clawed about her ears,

"Arrah, good woman, who axed for your companywho are you at all?"

"Your mother-in-law, jewel!" cried the Widow Rooney, making another open-armed rush at her beloved daughter-in-law; but Matty received the widow's protruding mouth on her elenched fist instead of her "couple-beggar;" and, at the words, Casey's friends lips, and the old woman's nose coming in for a share of dragged Andy from the cottage, bidding a rollicking Matty's knuckles, a ruby stream spurted forth, while adieu to their triumphant companion, who belted the all the colors of the rainbow danced before Mrs.

"Take that, you owld faggot!" cried Matty, as she To guard against an immediate alarm being given, shook Mrs. Rooney's tributary claret from the knuckles o' the place, you stack o' rags."

"Oh, Andy! Andy!" cried the mother, gathering herself up.

"Oh-that's it, is it?" cried Matty; "so it's Andy you "To be sure: why wouldn't I want him, you hussy?

My boy!my darlin'! my beauty!" "Well, go look for him!" cried Matty, giving her a

"Well, now, do you think I'll be turned out of my son's house so quietly as that, you unnatural baggage?" cried Mrs. Rooney, facing round, fiercely. Upon which a bitter altercation ensued between the women; in the sufficiently grotesque in itself; and one of the versions | course of which the widow soon learnt that Andy was not the possessor of Matty's charms: whereupon the had given his daughter the greatest fortune that ever old woman, no longer having the fear of damaging her daughter-in-law's beauty before her eyes, tackled to Now one of the open-eared people who had caught for a fight in right earnest, in the course of which some hold of the story by this end happened to meet Andy's reprisals were made by the widow in revenge for her mother, and, with a congratulatory grin, began with broken nose; but Matty's youth and activity, joined to "The top o' the mornin' to you, Mrs. Rooney, and sure her Amazonian spirit, turned the tide in her favor, though, had not the old lady been blown by her long run, the victory would not have been so easy, for she was a tough customer, and left Matty certain marks of her favor that did not rub out in a hurry-while she

> Off she reeled, bleeding and roaring, and while on her approach she had been blessing heaven and inventing sweet speeches for Matty, on her return she was cursing fate and heaping all sorts of hard names on the Amazon she came to flatter. Alas, for the brevity of human exultation!

> took away (as a keepsake) a handful of Matty's hair, by which she had long held on till a successful kick from > the gentle bride finally ejected Mrs. Rooney from the

How fared it in the meantime with Andy? He, poor devil! had passed a cold night, tied up to the old tree, and as the morning dawned, every object appeared to him through the dim light in a distorted form; the gaping hollow of the old trunk to which he was bound seemed like a hugh mouth, opening to swallow him, Micky Lavery set up a shout of laughter, which in- while the old knots looked like eyes, and the guarled branches like claws, staring at and ready to tear him in pieces.

A raven, perched above him on a lonely branch, "I beg your pardon, miss," said poor Andy, who in ceeded to tell her about Andy's marriage, but in such croaked dismally, till Andy fancied he could hear the extremity of his own humility had committed such a disjointed way, that it was some time before Mrs. words of reproach in the sounds, while a little tomtit an offense against Matty's pride. "I only meant Rooney could comprehend him-for his interjectional chattered and twittered on a neighboring bough, as if laughter at the capital joke it was, that's he should be he enjoyed and approved of all the severe things the the last to know it, and that he should have the luck to raven uttered. The little tomtit was the worst of the tell it, sometimes broke the thread of his story—and two, just as the solemn reproof of the wise can be betthen his collateral observations so disfigured the tale, ter borne than the impertinent remark of some chatthat its incomprehensibility became very much in- tering fool. To these imaginary evils was added the "You had better let me keep it then; 'twill be safer creased, until at last Mrs. Rooney was driven to push reality of some enormous water-rats that issued from an adjacent pool and began to eat Andy's hat and "For the tendher mercy, Micky Lavery, make me shoes, which had fallen off in his struggle with his captors; and all Andy's warning ejaculations could not make the vermin abstain from his shoes and his hat, which, to judge from their eager eating, could not stay their stomachs long, so that Andy, as he looked on at the rapid demolition, began to dread that they might "Gev him half his property, I tell you, and he'll have transfer their favors from his attire to himself, until the tramp of approaching horses relieved his anxiety, "Oh, more power to you, Andy!" cried his mother in and in a few minutes two horsemen stood before him-

Great was the surprise of the Father to see the fellow Lavery?" added she, getting distant and polite the he had married the night before, and whom he sunmoment she found herself mother to a rich man, and persed to be in the enjoyment of his honeymoon, tied up curtailing her familiarity with a poor one like Lav- to a tree and looking more dead than alive; and his indignation knew no bounds when he heard that a "couple-beggar" had dared to celebrate the marriage ceremony, which fact came out in the course of the explanation that Andy made of the desperate misadventure which had befallen him; but all other grieve ances gave way in the eyes of Father Phil to the "couple-beggar." "A'couple-beggar'! the audacious vagabones!" he cried, while he and the squire were engaged in loosing Andy's bonds. "A 'couple-beggar' in my parish! How fast they have tied him up, squire!" he added, as he endeavored to undo a knot. "A 'couple-beggar' indeed! I'll undo the marriage! have you a knife about you, squire? the blessed and holy tie of matrimony? your leg out o' that now-and wait till I lay my hands

"A desperate outrage this whole affair has been!"

said the squire. "But a couple-beggar, squire."

"His house broken into-"But a 'couple-beggar'-"

"His wife taken from him--" "But a 'couple-beggar'-" "The laws violated-"

"But my dues, squire-think o' that! what would become o' them, if 'couple-beggars' is allowed to show their audacious faces in the parish. Oh, wait till next Sunday, that's all-I'll have them up before the aithar, and I'll make them beg God's pardon, and my pardon, and the congregation's pardon, the audacious pair!"*

"It's an assault on Andy," said the squire. "It's a robbery on me," said Father Phil. "Could you identify the men?" said the squire.

"Do you know the 'couple-beggar?" said the priest. "Did James Casey lay his hands on you?" said the squire; "for he is a good man to have a warrant ngainst."

"Oh, Squire, Squire!" ejaculated Father Phil; "talking of laying hands on him is it you are?-didn't that blackguard 'couple-beggar' lay his dirty hands on a woman that my bran new benediction was upon! Sure, they'd do anything after that!"

By this time Andy was free, and having received the squire's directions to follow him to Merryvale, Father Phil and the worthy squire were once more in their saddles and proceeded quietly to the same place, the squire silently considering the audacity of the coup-demain which robbed Andy of his wife, and his reverence puffing out his rosy cheeks and muttering sundry angry sentences, the intelligible words of which were "couplebeggar.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Doubtless the reader has anticipated that the presence of Father Phil in the company of the squire at this immediate time was on account of the communication made by Andy about the post-office affair. Father angel." Phil had determined to give the squire freedom from the strategetic coil in which Larry Hogan had ensnared him, and lost no time in setting about it; and it was on his intended visit to Merryvale that he met its hospitable owner, and telling him there was a matter of some private importance he wished to communicate, suggested a quiet ride together; and this it was which led to their traversing the lonely little lane where they discovered Andy, whose name was so principal in the revelations of that day. To the squire those revelations were of the dearest importance; for they relieved his mind from a weight which had been oppressing it for some time, and set his heart at rest. Egan, it must be remarked, was an odd mixture of courage and cowardice; undaunted by personal danger, but strangely timorous where moral courage was required. A remarkable shyness, too, made him hesitate constantly in the utterance of a word which might explain away any difficulty in which he chanced to find himself; and this helped to keep his tongue tied in the matter where Larry Hogan had continued to make himself a bugbear. He had a horror, too, of being thought capable of doing a dishonorable thing, and the shame he felt at having peeped into a letter was so stinging, that the idea of asking any one's advice in the dilemma in which he was placed made him recoil from the thought of such aid. Now, Father Phil had relieved him from the difficulties his own weakness imposed; the subject had been forced upon him; and once forced to speak he made a full acknowledgement of all that had taken place; and when he found Andy had not borne witness against him, and that Larry Hogan only inferred his participation in the transaction, he saw on Father Phil's showing that he was not really in Larry Hogan's power; for though he admitted he had given Larry a tritle of money from time to time when Larry asked for it, under the influence of certain invendoes, yet that was no proof against him; and Father Phil's advice was to get Andy out of words, "to keep never minding him," had so ordained it) made the matter easier, and the hoping I would never have cause to find fault with him Squire and the Father, as they rode toward Merryvale again. Sure, I thought he was repenting of his mistogether to dinner, agreed to pack Andy off without deeds, and I said I was glad to hear such good words named to bear them company.

ing rascal."

jailer, did I say-by dad, he bates any jailer I ever heard of black on me. I roared and shouted inside while with a hook and eye."

respecting those letters I threw into the fire; for re- even, says he, for the abuse you gave me yesterday, member, Father, I only peeped into one and destroyed, and off he ran." the others; but one of the letters, I must tell you, was directed to yourself."

"Faith, then, I forgive you that, squire," said Father Phil, "for I hate letters; but if you have any scruple of conscience on the subject, write me one yourself, and that will do as well." The squire could not help thinking the Father's mode cer's daughter he was sweet upon." of settling the difficulty worthy of Handy Andy himself; but he did not tell the Father so. They had now reached Merryvale, where the goodhumored priest was heartily welcomed, and where Dr. in the present case, for the girl would have nothing to Growling, Dick Dawson, and Murphy were also guests say to him, and Tom had great delight whenever he tor. at dinner. Great was the delight of the party at the could annoy this poor fool in his love-making plots.

Noctor.

"Aye, aye! joke away, doctor," "Do you think, Father Phil," said Murphy, "that

* A man and woman who had been united by a "couple-beggar" were called up one Sunday by the priest in the face of the congregation, and summoned, as Father Phil threatens above, to beg God's pardon, and the priest's pardon, and the congregation's pardon; out the woman stoutly refused the last condition. "I'll "take her home out o' that," said he to her husband hasn't got up these two days! 'Get up, you brute!' to do the service.' Tom, nothing loath, threw aside her well, you'll be sorry—for if you don't make her 'Why, he's dead!' says he. 'Yes,' says Tom, 'since his stops, and began to work away like a beaver, while afraid of you, she'll master you, too-take her home | Monday last. So I don't think you can make him go, | every now and then he swore at the bellows blower ion and leather her."-FAOT.

that marriage was made in heaven, where we are told marriages are made?"

would have held upon earth.' "Very well answered, Father," said the squire.

"I don't know what other people think about matches being made in heaven," said Growling, "but I have my suspicions they are sometimes made in another place." "Oh, fie, doctor!" said Mrs. Egan.

Phil, "or he wouldn't say so."

"Thank you, Father Phil, for so polite a speech." The doctor took his pencil from his pocket and began to write on a small bit of paper, which the priest observing, asked him what he was about, "or is it writing a prescription you are," said he, "for compounding better marriages than I can?"

"Something very naughty, I dare say, the doctor is doing," said Fanny Dawson.

"Judge for yourself, lady fair," said the doctor, handing Fanny the slip of paper. Fanny looked at it for a moment and smiled, but declared it was very wicked, indeed. "Then read it for the company, and condemn me out of your own pretty mouth, Miss Dawson," said the doctor. "It is too wicked." "If it is ever so wicked," said Father Phil, "the wickedness will be neutralized by being read by an

"Well done, St. Omer's," cried Murphy. "Really Father," said Fanny, blushing, "you are desperately gallant to-day, and just to shame you, and show how little of an angel I am, I will read the doctor's epigram:

"'Though matches are all made in heaven, they say, the country wherein to have "the same" satisfied. Yet Hymen, who mischief oft hatches, Sometimes deals with the house t'other side of the way,

"Oh, doctor! I'm afraid you are a woman-hater." said Mrs. Egan. "Come away, Fanny, I am sure they want to get rid of us." "Yes," said Fanny, rising and joining her sister, who was leaving the room, "and now, after abusing poor Hymen, gentlemen, we leave you to your favorite worship of Bacchus,"

And there they make Lucifer matches."

The departure of the ladies changed the conversation, and after the gentlemen had resumed their seats, the doctor asked Dick Dawson how soon he intended going to London.

give me that letter of introduction to your friend in he heard some one use the word chapeau, and having Dublin, whom I long to know."

"Who is he?" asked the squire. Tom,' from his vocal powers; or, as some name him, 'Organ Loftus,' from his imitation of that instrument, which is an excessively comical piece of caricature." "Oh! I know him well," said Father Phil.

"How did you manage to become acquainted with and walk,"" him?" inquired the doctor, for I did not think he lay much in your way."

"It was he became acquainted with me," said Father Phil, "and this was the way of it—he was down on a lusion in the chapel to his indiscretions, and threaten resolutions, because he had a good 'laudable voice.'" to make his conduct a subject of severe public censure the way as soon as possible, and then to set Larry if he did not mind his manners a little better. Well, my quietly at deflance—that is to say, in Father Phil's own dear, who should call on me on the Monday morning after but Misther Tom, all smiles, and graces, and pro- story you promised about the Duke and Tom Loftus." Now Andy not being encumbered with a wife (as fate testing he was sorry he fell under my displeasure, and slaps the door and fastens it on me, and pulls the string of-for that fellow is so 'cute, he could keep Newyate Misther Tom Loftus was screechin' laughing outside,

> "he's a queer devil. I remember on one occasion a poor dandy puppy, who was in the same office with him-for Tom is in the Ordnance department, you Patrick's Cathedral." must know-this puppy, sir, wanted to go to the Ashbourne races and cut a figure in the eyes of a rich gro-

"Being sweet upon a grocer's daughter," said Murphy, "is like bringing coals to Newcastle." "Faith! it was coals to Newcastle with a vengeance, and you've lost your bet!' "

"That was hardly a fair joke," said the Squire.

"Tom never stops to think of that," returned the "I don't suppose it was, Mr. Murphy; for if it had it | doctor; "he's the oddest fellow I ever knew. The last. time I was in Dublin, I called on Tom and found him one bitter cold and stormy morning standing at an open window, nearly quite undressed. On asking him what he was about, he said he was getting up a bass roice; that Mrs. Somebody, who gave good dinners and bad concerts, was disappointed of her bass singer, 'and "The doctor, ma'am, is an old bachelor," said Father I think, said Tom, 'I'll be hoarse enough in the evening to take double B flat. Systems are the fashion now, 'said he; 'there is the Logierian system and other syst?ms, and mine is the Cold-air-ian system, and the best in the world for getting up a bass voice,"

"That was very original, certainly," said the Squire.
"But did you ever hear of his adventure with the Duke of Wellington?" said the doctor.

"The Duke!" they all exclaimed. "Yes-that is, when he was only Sir Arthur Wellesley. Well, I'll tell you."

"Stop," said the Squire, "a fresh story requires a fresh bottle. Let me ring for some claret."

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE servant who brought in the claret announced at the same time the arrival of a fresh guest in the person of "Captain Moriarty," who was welcomed by most of the party by the name of Randal. The Squire regretted he was too late for dinner, inquiring at the same time if he would like to have something to eat at the side-table; but Randal declined the offer, assuring the Squire he had got some refreshment during the day while he had been out shooting; but as the sport led him near Merryvale, and "he had a great thirst upon him," he did not know a better house in

"Then you're just in time for some cool claret," said the Squire; "so sit down beside the doctor, for he must have the first glass and broach the bottle, before he broaches the story he's going to tell us—that's only

The doctor filled his glass and tested. "What a nice 'chaleau' Margaux' must be," said he, as he laid down his glass. "I should like to be a tenant-at-will there, at a small rent."

"And no taxes," said Dick "Except my duty to the claret," replied the doctor.

" 'My favorite chateau Is that of Margaux.'

By-the-by, talking of chateau, ther's the big brewer "I start immediately," said Dick. "Don't forget to over at the town, who is anxious to affect gentility, and found out it was the French for hat, he determined to show off on the earliest possible occasion, and selected "One Tom Loftus-or, as his friends call him, 'Piping a public meeting of some sort to display his accomplishment. Taking some cause of objection to the proceedings, as an excuse for leaving the meeting, he said, 'Gentlemen, the fact is I can't agree with you, so I may as well take my chateau under my arm at once,

"Is not that an invention of your own, doctor?" said the Squire.

"I heard it for a fact," said Growling. "And 'tis true," added Murphy, "for I was present! visit betimes in the parish I was in before this, and his when he said it. Add at an earlier part of the proceedbehavior was so wild that I was obliged to make an alings he suggested that the parish clerk should read the "A parish clerk ought to have," said the doctor-"ch.

Father Phil?—' Landamus!" "Leave your Latin," said Dick, "and tell us that "Right, Mister Dick," said Father Phil. "The story, doctor," said the Squire. "Oh, don't make such bones about it," said Growling; "'tis but a triffe after all; only it shows you what delay, and thus place him beyond Hogan's power; and from him. 'A'then, Father,' says he, 'I hear you have a queer and reckless rascal Tom is. I told you he was as Dick Dawson was going to London with Murphy, to got a great curiosity from Dublin-a shower-bath, I caffed Organ' Loftus by his friends, in consequence of push the petition against Scatterbrain's return, it was hear?' So I said I had; and indeed, to be caudid, I was the imitation he makes of that instrument; and it cerlooked upon as a lucky chance, and Andy was at once as proud as a peacock of the same bath, which tickled tainly is worth hearing and seeing, for your eyes have my fancy when I was once in town, and so I bought it. as much to do with the affair as your ears. Tom plants "But you must not let Hogan know that Andy is 'Would you show it to me?' says he. 'To be sure,' himself on a high office-stool, before one of those lofty sent away under your patronage, Squire," said the says I, and off I went, like a fool, and put the wather desks with long rows of drawers down each side and a Father, "for that would be presumptive evidence you on the top, and showed him how, when a string was hole between to put your legs under. Well, sir, Tom had an interest in his absence; and Hogan is the very pulled, down it came—and he pretended not clearly to pulls out the top drawers, like the stops of an organ, blackguard would see it fast enough, for he is a know- understand the thing, and at last said, Sure it's not and the lower ones by way of pedals, and then he beinto that sentry-box you get?' says he. 'Oh yes,' said gins thrashing the desks like the finger-board of an or-He's the deepest scoundrel I ever met," said the I, getting into it quite innocent; when, my dear, he gan, with his hands, while his feet kick away at the lower drawers as if he was the greatest pedal performer As knowing as a jailer," said Father Phil. "A and souses me with the water, and I with my best suit out of Germany, and he emits a rapid succession of grunts and squeaks, producing a ludicrous reminiscence of the instrument, which I defy any one to hear and dancing round the room with delight. At last, without laughing. Several sows and an indefinite num-By-the-bye, there's one thing I forgot to tell you, when he could speak, he said, 'Now, Father, we're ber of sucking pigs could not make a greater noise, and Tom himself declares that he studied the instrument in a pigsty, which he maintains gave the first no-"That's just like him," said old Growling, chuckling; tion of an organ. Well, sir, the youths in the office as sist in 'doing the service,' as they call it, that is making an imitation of the chanting and so so forth in St.

> "Oh, the haythens!" said Father Phil. "One does Stray, and another Weyman, and another Sir John Stevenson, and so on; and they go on responsing and singing 'Amen' till the Ordnance Office rings again."

"Have they nothing better to do?" asked the Squire. "Very little but reading the papers," said the doo-

"Well, Tom-you must know, sir-was transferred history they heard, when the cloth was drawn, of So, when he came to Tom to ask for the loan of his some time ago, by the interest of many influential Andy's wedding, so much in keeping with his former horse, Tom said he should have him if he could make the friends, to the London department; and the fame of his life and adventures, and Father Phil had another op- smallest use of him- but I don't think you can, said musical powers had gone before him from some of the portunity of venting his rage against the "couple-beg- Tom. 'Leave that to me,' said the youth. 'I don't English clerks in Ireland who had been advanced to the think you could make him go,' said Tom. 'I'll buy a higher posts in Dublin, and kept up correspondence "That was but a slip-knot you tied, Father," said the new pair of spurs,' said the puppy. 'Let them be with their old friends in London; and it was not long handsome ones,' said Tom. 'I was looking at a very until Tom was requested to go through an anthem on . handsome pair at Lamprey's, yesterday, said the the great office-desk. Tom was only too glad to be askyoung gentleman. 'Then you can buy them on your ed, and he kept the whole office in a roar for an hour way to my stables,' said Tom; and sure enough, sir, with all the varieties of the instrument-from the diathe youth laid out his money on a very costly pair of pason to the flute-stop—and the devil a more business persuaders, and then proceeded homewards with Tom. was done in the office that day, and Tom before long Now, with all your spurs,' said Tom, 'I don't think made the sober English fellows as great idlers as the you'll be able to make him go.' 'Is he so very vicious, chaps in Dublin. Well, it was not long until a sudden then? inquired the youth, who began to think of his this it of business cause upon the department, in conseneck. 'On the contrary,' said Tom, 'he's perfectly quenee of the urgent preparations making for supplies beg God's pardon and your reverence's pardon," she quiet, but won't go for you, I'll bet a pound.' Done! to Spain, at the time the buke was going there to take "Oh you conthrairy baggage," cried his reverence: 'for he's lying down' 'Faith, he is,' said Tom, 'and stinence, began to yearn for it, and Tom was requested who had humbled himself-" take her home, and leas said the innocont youth, giving a smart cut of his whip his official papers, set up a big ledger before him. and ther her well-for she wants it; and if you don't leather on the horse's flank; but the horse did not budge, commenced his legerdemain, as he called it, pol. of out not giving him wind enough, whereupon the chocisters

a resplendent 'A-a-a-men,' the door opened, and in walked a smart-looking gentleman, with rather a large nose and quick eye, which latter glanced round the office, where a sudden endeavor was made by everybody to get back to his place. The smart gentleman seemed rather surprised to see a little fat man blowing at a desk instead of the fire, and long Tom kicking, grunting and squealing like mad. The bellows-blower was so taken by surprise he couldn't stir, and Tom, having his back to them, did not see what had taken place, and went on as if nothing had happened, till the smart gentleman went up to him, and, tapping on Tom's desk with a little riding-whip, he said, 'I'm sor to disturb you, sir, but I wish to know what you're about.' 'We're doing the service, sir,' said Tom, no way abashed at the sight of the stranger, for he did not know it was Sir Arthur Wellesley was talking to him. 'Not the public service, sir,' said Sir Arthur. 'Yes, sir,' said Tom, 'the service as by law established in the second year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth,' and he favored the future hero of Waterloo with a the effect." touch of the organ. 'Who is the head of this office?' inquired Sir Arthur. Tom, with a very gracious bow, replied, 'I am principal organist, and allow me to introduce you to the principal bellows-blower '-and he eral who isn't as hard as his own round shot." pointed to the poor little man, who let the bellows fall did not perceive till now that all the clerks were taken | ness with which the dear young man set off to mow next morning's 'affair.' with a sudden fit of industry, and were writing away | down the French. for the bare life; and he east a look of surprise round the office while Sir Arthur was looking at the bellows- him afterward in the Peninsula. He was let back after blower. One of the clerks made a wry face at Tom, which showed him all was not right. 'Is this the way His Majesty's service generally goes on here?' said Sir Arthur, sharply. No one answered; but Tom saw, by the long faces of the clerks and the short question of the visitor, that he was somebody.

"'Some transports are waiting for ordnance stores, and I am referred to this office, said Sir Arthur; can anyone give me a satisfactory answer?

was absent) came forward and said, 'I believe, sir-' "' You believe, but you don't know,' said Sir Arthur; 'so I must wait for stores while you are playing tomfoolery here. I'll report this.' Then, producing a little tablet and a pencil, he turned to Tom and said, 'Favor broken English, I think, helps them." me with your name, sir?'

"'I give you my honor,' said Tom. "'I'd rather you'd give me the stores, sir. I'll trouble tally " you for your name,'

"'Upon my honor, sir,' said Tom, again.

"'You seem to have a great deal of that article on your hands, sir,' said Sir Arthur: 'you're an Irishman, I suppose? "Yes, sir,' said Tom.

"'I thought so. Your name?" " Loftus, sir.

" In this? 60 . 1 . - . 1" " (plof it."

"He put up his tablet after writing the name. "'May I beg the favor to know, sir," said Tom, 'to whom I have the honor of addressing myself?'

"'Sir Arthur Wellesley, sir.' "'Oh, J-s!' said Tom, 'I'm done!'

"Sir Arthur could not help laughing at the extraordinary change in Tom's countenance; and Tom, taking advantage of this relaxation in his iron manner, said, in a most penitent tone, 'Oh, Sir Arthur Wellesley, only forgive me this time, and 'pon my soul,' says hewith the richest brogue—'I'll play a Te Deum for the first licking you give the French.' Sir Arthur smiled and left the office.

"Did he report as he threatened?' asked the squire. "Faith, he did."

"And Tom?" inquired Dick.

"Was sent back to Ireland, sir."

Murphy.

"Well, he did not let him suffer in pocket; he was transferred at as good a salary to a less important department; but you know the Duke has been celebrated all his life for never overlooking a breach of duty." "And who can blame him?" said Moriarty.

"One great advantage of the practice has been," said the Squire, "that no man has been better served. remember hearing a striking instance of what, perhaps, might be called severe justice, which he exercised on a young and distinguished officer of artillery in Spain; and though one cannot help pityle the case of the gallant young fellow who was the sacrifice, yet the question of strict duty, to the very word, was set at rest forever under the Duke's command, and it saved much after-trouble by making every officer satisfied, however tiery his courage or tender his sense of being suspected of the white feather, that implicit obedience was the course he must pursue. The case was this: the army was going into action-"

"What action was it?" inquired Father Phil, with that remarkable alacrity which men of peace evince in hearing the fullest particulars about war, perhaps because it is forbidden to their cloth; one of the many instances of things acquiring a fictitious value by being interdicted-just as Father Phil himself might have been a Protestant only for the penal laws.

"I don't know what action it was," said the Squire. going into action that the Duke posted an officer, with safe de king." Ve den drink a l'amilie, and shek hands as her eve can that the young transfer an ' his six guns, at a certain point, telling him to remain over dat fire in good frais in the later than the ground. He can that there till he had orders from him. Away went the rest might ero wile in the morning. I the sar, dut the was the rest would be been to fine of the army, and the officer was left doing nothing at was me 'twas wire two lated has it to has saide, and helped to support have all, which he didn't like; for he was one of those high so are de same & i. date to same in the limit to the limit of the limit. blooded gentlemen who are never so happy as when was, and take two friends. Vell, I got dealed the Brown of t longing for the head of a French column to be ham- says to me, 'Sleep, old fellow; I know you at the head of a French column to be ham- says to me, 'Sleep, old fellow; I know you at the head of a French column to be hammering away at. In half an hour or so he heard the fare of him and its distribution that the fare of him and its distribution. distant sound of action, and it approached nearer and bearing the law to the sound of action, and it approached nearer and bearing the law to the sound of action, and it approached nearer and bearing the law to the law t nearer, until he heard it close behind him; and he won- and the process of de two arms get so clear, while he red to our han. You seem at better sorrow. rather that he was not invited to take a share in a large special some shot gets fired, and in our time that he was not invited to take a share in a large special some shot gets fired, and in our large large share in a large line. 'No wonder, it, when, put to his thought, up came an aide-de-camp nor. I air. stake by derivate by der at full speed, telling him that General Somebody or were all the state of the were all the speed, telling him that General Somebody or were all the state of the dered him to bring up his guns. The officer asked did from to your post, it is at a first to get I am childless to-day. But I not the order come from Lord Wellington? The aidede-camp said no, but from the General, whoever he was. The officer explained that he was placed there by Lord Wellington, under command not to move, unless by an ercer from himself. The aide-de-camp stated that the ve regain de post!!!- I am safe!!!! De fusillade cease stallant boys!'-and again he wept bitterly, till clearing Concrul's entire brigade was being driven in and must -it is only an affair of outposts. I that I am safe-I has eyes from the tears, and looking up in the young would kick the bellows-blower to accelerate his flatu- be annihilated without the aid of the guns, and asked tink I am very fine fellow-but Monsieur [Aide-Major lency. Well, sir, they were in the middle of the service, 'would be let a whole brigade be slaughtered?' in a tone send for me and speak, 'Vere vos you last night, sair?' and all the blackgaurds making responses in due sea- which wounded the young soldier's pride, savoring, as 'I mount guard by de mill.' 'Are you sure?' 'Out, son, when, just as Tom was quivering under a portent- he thought it did, of an imputation on his courage. He monsteur.' 'Vere vos you ven your post vos attack?' ous grunt, which might have shamed the principal immediately ordered his guns to move and joined bat- I saw it vos no use to deny any longer, so I confess to diapason of Harlaem, and the subs were drawing out the with the General; but while he was away an aide- him everything. 'Sair,' said he, 'you rally your men de-camp from Lord Wellington rode up to where the very good, or you should be shot! Young man, rememguns had been posted, and, of course, no gun was to be ber,' said he-I will never forget his vorts-' young num, had for the service which Lord Wellington required. rine is goot-slip is goot-goat is goot-but honners is bet-Well, the French were repulsed, as it happened; but term." the want of those six guns seriously marred a preconcerted movement of the Duke's, and the officer in command of them was immediately brought to a courtmartial, and would have lost his commission but for the universal interest made in his favor by the general said the doctor. "You should take a story as you get officers in consideration of his former meritorious con- it, and not play the dissector upon it, mangling its duct and distinguished gallantry, and under the pecu- poor body to discover the bit of embellishment; and liar circumstances of the case. They did not break, as long as a raconteur maintains vralemblance, I conhim, but he was suspended, and Lord Wellington sent | tend you are bound to receive the whole as true him home to England. Almost every general officer in the army endeavored to get his sentence revoked, la- are a story-teller yourself, and enter upon the defense menting the fate of a gallant fellow being sent away of your craft with great spirit." for a slight error in judgment while the army was in hot action; but Lord Wellington was inexorable, saying | quite right." he must make an example to secure himself in the perfeet obedience of officers to their orders; and it had artist," said the doctor; "but so long as they are in

"Well, that's what I call hard!" said Dick. "My dear Dick," said the Squire, "war is altogether a hard thing, and a man has no business to be a Gen-

"I can tell you," said Moriarty, "for I served with marked the squire. a year or so, and became so thorough a disciplinarian, that he swore, when once he was at his post 'They might kill his futher before his face and he wouldn't budge until he had orders."

"A most Christian resolution," said the doctor. "Well, I can tell you," said Moriarty, "of a Frenchman, who made a greater breach of discipline, and it was treated more leniently. I heard the story from the iment of friars, is it?" man's own lips, and if I could only give you his voice "The senior clerk present (for the head of the office and gesture and manner it would amuse you. What a river they were, and the French, taking advantage of fellows those Frenchmen are, to be sure, for telling a their helpless condition, were peppering away at them story! they make a shrug or a wink have twenty dif- hard and fast." ferent meanings, and their claws are most eloquent one might say they talk on their fingers—and their

Diek. "I have heard you imitate a Frenchman capi-

my whistle with a glass of claret before I begin—a French story should have French wine." Randal the condition of the womenkind, and each horseman tossed off one glass, and filled a second by way of re- took up a woman behind him, though it diminished his serve, and then began the French officer's story.

mek retrograde movement-not retreat-no, no-but Now wasn't that generous?" retrogravle movement. Vell von night I was wit my picket, guart, and it was raining like de devil, and de mark. vind vos vinding up de valley, so cold as noting at all, and I look into de dark-for ve vere vairy moche on the over the river." qui rire, because ve expec de Ingelish to attaque de next day-but I see noting; but de tramp of horse come closer and closer, and at last I ask, 'Who is dere?' and as the soldiers have the reputation of being, they never de tramp of de horse stop. I run forward, and den I see Ingelish offissir of cavallerie. I address him, and prisonair-for you must know dat he tos prisonair, if I insimuate that we soldiers fear fire." like, ven he vos vithin our line. He is very polite-he each ozer. 'I aff lost my roat,' he say; and I say, they fiesh and blood like ourselves?" 'Yais'-but I vill put him into his roat, and so I ask for "Not a bit like you," said Moriarty. "You sleek and "That was hard, after the Duke smiled at him," said a moment pardon, and go back to my caporal, and tell smooth gentlemen who live in luxurious peace know him to be on de qui vive till I come back. De Ingelish | little of a soldier's danger or feelings." den tank me, vera moche like gentilman, and vish he tion." coot mek me some return for my generosite, as he please to say—and I say, 'Bah / Ingelish gentilman von I do de fears nothing!" said foriarty, with energy. same to French offisair who lose his vay.' 'Den come here, he say, 'bon enfant, can you leave your post for ger, I could not resist the vasso every mochetical harm is broached it flows on until it is rather more than time and I vos so ongrie-I go vis him-not fife hunder to go to the ladies.

"A capital story, Randal," cried Dick, "but how much of it did you invent?"

"Pon my life, it is as near the original as possible." "Besides, that is not a fair way of using a story,"

"A most author-like creed, doctor," said Dick; "you

"And justice, too," said the squire; "the doctor is

"Don't suppose I can't see the little touches of the keeping with the picture, I enjoy them, for instance, my friend Randal's touch of the Englishman Assling Got safe de King ' is very happy—quite in character."

"Well, good or bad, the story in substance is true," said Randal, "and puts the Englishman in a fine point "And what became of the dear young man?" said of view-a generous fellow, sharing his supper with his from his hand as Sir Arthur fixed his eye on him. Tom Father Phil, who seemed much touched by the readi- enemy whose sword may be through his body in the

"But the Frenchman was generous to him first," re-

"Certainly—I admit it," said Randal. "In short, they were both fine fellows," "Oh, sir," said Father Phil, "the French are not deficient in a chivalrous spirit. I heard once a very pretty bit of anecdote about the way they behaved to one of our regiments on a retreat in Spain,"

" Your regiments!" said Moriarty, who was rather fond of hitting hard at a priest when he could; "a reg-

"No, captain, but of soldiers; and it's going through

"Very generous indeed!" said Moriarty, laughing. "Let me finish my story, captain, before you quiz it. I say they were peppering them sorely while they were "Then give the story, Randal, in his manner," said | crossing the river, until some women—the followers of the camp-ran down (poor creatures) to the shore, and the stream was so deep in the middle they could scarce-"Well, here goes," said Moriarty; "but let me wet ly ford it; so some dragoons who were galloping as hard as they could out of the fire, pulled up on seeing own power of speeding from the danger. The moment "You see, sare, it vos ven in Espagne de bivouac ves the French saw this act of mauly courtesy, they ceased vairy and indeet pon us, vor ve coot naut get into de firing, gave the dragoons a cheer, and as long as the town at all, nevair, becos you dam Ingelish keep all de | women were within gunshot, not a trigger in the French town to yoursefs-ver ve fall back at dat time becos we line, but volleys of cheers instead of ball-cartridge was get no support-no corps de reserve, you perceive-so ve sent after the brigade till all the women were over.

"Twas a handsome thing!" was the universal re-

"And faith I can tell you, Captain Moriarty, the and de dark vos vot you could not see-no-not your army took advantage of it; for there was a great nose bevore your face. Vell, I hear de tramp of horse, struggle to have the pleasure of the ladies' company

> "I dare say, Father Phil," said the squire, laughing. "Throth, squire," said the padre, "fond of the girls liked them better than that same day."

"Yes, yes," said Moriarty, a little piqued, for he tell him he is in our lines, but I do not vant to mek him rather allered the "dare-devil," "I see you mean to

"I did not say 'fear,' captain-but they'd like to get say, 'Bien oblige-bon enfant;' and we tek off our hat to out of it, for all that, and small blame to them-aren't offisair and me talk very plaisant vile ve go togezer "Captain, we all have our dangers to go through;

down de leetel roat, and ven ve come to de turn, I say, and maybe a priest has as many as a soldier; and we 'Bon soir, Monsieur le Capitaine-dat is your vay.' He only show a difference of taste, after all, in the selec-

"Well, Father Blake, all I know is, that a true soldier

"Maybe so," answered Father Phil, quietly. "It is quite clear, however," said Murphy, "that war, 'an an hour?' 'Leave my post?' I say. 'Yais,' said with all its horrors, can call out occasionally the finer he, 'I know your army has not moche provision lately, feelings of our natures; but it is only such red eming and maybe you are ongrie? 'Ma foi, yais,' said I; 'I traits as those we have heard which can reconcile us to aif nant slips to my eyes, nor meat to my stomach, for it. I remember having heard an incident of war, my more dan fife days.' 'Vell, bon enjant,' he say, 'come vis self, which affected me much," who caught the infecme, and I vill gif you good supper, goot vine, and goot | tion of military anecdote which circled the table; and velcome. 'Coot I leave my post?' I say. He say, indeed there is no more catching theme can be started 'In' ' (or of take care tall , or come it by among men, for it may be remarked that whenever it yarts-uh / bon Dieu-how nice f In de corner of a leetel "It was in the earlier portion of that memoral le day ruin chapel dere is nice bit of fire, and hang on a string of Waterloo," said Murphy, "that a young officer of the before it de half of a kid-oh ciel! de smell of de ros-bif Guards received a wound which brought him to the was so nice I rub my hands to de fire-I sniff the ground. His companions rushed on to seize some point carried I see in another corner a comple bodies of wine which their desperate valor was called on to carry, and were,' it was all watars in my mouts! Ve sit down to he was left, utterly unable to rise, for the wound suppair I nevair did ate so moche in my life. Ve did was in his foot. He lay for some hours with the timil de bones, and vesh down all mil ver good wine thunder of that terrible day ringing around him, and with it! Vedons de toust-uligionie and ve tall of many a rush of horse and food lad parad close beside "nor the officer's name-for I don't set up for a mili- de campaign. Ve drink a ulu Putro, and den I tirk of horn. Towards the close of the day he saw one of the tary chronicler; but it was, as I have been telling you, la belle France and ma douce amie-and he fissel, Got lines with the first line they are making other people miserable, and he was sleepy, dat my eyes go blink, blink, and my front first land to the people miserable, and he was sleepy, dat my eyes go blink, blink, and my front first land to the people miserable, and he was sleepy, dat my eyes go blink, blink, and my front first land to the people miserable, and he was sleepy, dat my eyes go blink, blink, and my front first land to the people miserable, and he was sleepy, dat my eyes go blink, blink, and my front first land to the people miserable, and he was sleepy, dat my eyes go blink, blink, and my front first land to the people miserable, and he was sleepy, dat my eyes go blink, blink, and my front first land to the people miserable, and he was sleepy, dat my eyes go blink, blink, and my front first land to the people miserable, and he was sleepy, dat my eyes go blink, blink, and my front first land to the people miserable miserable. there we show if the board and I ranged to my post. have revenged them? he said fiercely, and as he spoke (. . it is poor of the mount to I am run deslama I resh to blood. 'But, oh' that will not bring me back my boys!' de front I raily mes by mes ve stand! ve advance!! he exclaimed, relapsing into his sorrow. 'My three moldier's handsome face, he said tenderly, 'You are like of the weaker sex over the stronger, and how the word recited this anecdote; and as for Father Phil, he was quite melted, ejaculating in an under tone, "Oh, my any day, or a tough argument of one of the fathers, poor fellow! my poor fellow!"

"So there," said Murphy, "is an example of a man, with revenge in his heart, and his right arm tired with slaughter, suddenly melted into gentleness by a resemblance to his child."

"'Tis very touching, but very sad," said the Squire. "My dear sir," said the doctor, with his peculiar dryness, "sadness is the principal fruit which warfare must ever produce. You may talk of glory as long as you like, but you cannot have your laurel without your cypress, and though you may select certain bits of sentiment out of a mass of horrors, if you allow me, I will give you one little story which shan't keep you long, and will serve as a commentary upon war and glory in general. "At the peace of 1803, I happened to be traveling through a town in France where a certain count I knew resided. I waited upon him, and he received me most cordially, and invited me to dinner. I made the excuse that I was only en route, and supplied with but traveling costume, and therefore not fit to present myself amongst the guests of such a house as his. He assured me I should only meet his own family, and pledged himself for Madame la Comtesse being willing to waive the ceremony of a grande toilette. I went to the house at the appointed hour, and as I passed through the hall I cast a glance at the dining-room and saw a very long lady answers, "That's what I'd do. Do you call that table laid. On arriving at the reception-room, I taxed poetry?" the count with having broken faith with me, and was assured me the count had dealt honestly by me, for that I was the only guest to join the family party. Well, we sat down to dinner, three-and-twenty persons; is poetry in them—but if not poetry, certainly feeling." myself, the count and countess, and their twenty children/ and a more lovely family I never saw; he a man in a vigor of life, she a still attractive woman, and these their offspring lining the table, where the happy eyes of father and mother glanced with pride and affection from one side to the other on these future stails of in the discussion. "But what are these lines which extheir old age. Well, the peace of Amiens was of short cite Randal's ire?" duration, and I saw no more of the count till Napoleon's abdication. Then I visited France again, and saw my old friend. But it was a sad sight, sir, in that same house, where, little more than ten years before, I had seen the bloom and beauty of twenty children, to sit down with three-all he had left him. His sons had fallen in battle-his daughters had died widowed, leaving but orphans. And thus it was all over France. While the public voice shouted 'Glory!' wailing was in her homes. Her temple of victory was filled with trophies, but her hearths were made desolate." "Still, sir, a true soldier fears nothing," repeated Moriarty.

"Baithershin," said Father Phil. "Faith I have been in places of danger, you'd be glad to get out of, I can tell you, as bould as you are, captain. "You'll pardon me for doubting you, Father Blake."

said Moriarty, rather huffed. "Faith then you wouldn't like to be where I was before I came here; that is, in a mud cabin, where I was giving the last rites to six people dying in the typhus fever." "Typhus!" exclaimed Moriarty, growing pale, and instinctively withdrawing his chair as far as he could from the padre beside whom he sat. "Ay, typhus, sir; most inveterate typhus." "Gracious Heaven!" said Moriarty, rising, "how can you do such a dreadful thing as run the risk of bearing infection into society?" "I thought soldiers were not afraid of anything," said Father Phil, laughing at him; and the rest of the party joined in the merriment.

"Fairly hit, Moriarty," said Dick. "Nonsense," said Moriarty; "when I spoke of danger, I meant such open danger as-in short, not such insidious lurking abomination as infection; for I contend that-" "Say no more, Randal," said Growling, "you're done!-Father Phil has floored you." "I deny it," said Moriarty, warmly; but the more he denied it, the more every one laughed at him, "You're more frightened than hurt, Moriarty," said the 'squire; "for the best of the joke is, Father Phil wasn't in contact with typhus at all, but was riding with me-and 'tis but a joke."

Here they all roared at Moriarty, who was excessively angry, but felt himself in such a ridiculous position that he could not quarrel with anybody. "Pardon me, my dear Captain," said the Father; "I only wanted to show you that a priest has to run the risk of his life just as much as the boldest soldier of them all. But don't you think, squire, 'tis time to join the ladies? I'm sure the tay will be tired waiting for US. 13

CHAPTER XXXIII. Mas. Egan was engaged in some needlework, and Fanny turning over the leaves of a music-book, and occasionally humming some bars of her favorite song, as the gentlemen came into the drawing-room. Fanny rose from the pianoforte as they entered. "Oh, Miss Dawson," exclaimed Moriarty, "why tantalize us so much as to let us see you seated in that place where you can render so much delight, only to leave it as we enter?" Fanny turned off the captain's flourishing speech with a few lively words and a smile, and took her seat at the tea-table to do the honors.

"The captain," said Father Phil to the doctor, "is equally great in love or war." "And knows as little of one as the other," said the doctor. "His attacks are too open." "And therefore easily foiled," said Father Phil. "How that pretty creature, with the turn of a word and a curl of her lip, upset him that time! Oh! what a powerful thing a woman's smile is, doctor? I often congratulate myself that my calling puts all such mundane follies and attractions out of my way, when I see and know what fools wise men are sometimes made by silly girls. Oh, it is fearful, doctor; though, of course, part of the mysterious dispensation of an all-wise Providence." "That fools should have the mastery, is it?" inquired

the doctor, drily, with a mischievous query in his eye

"Tut, tut, tut, doctor," replied Father Phil, impa_ tiently; "you know well enough what I mean, and T won't allow you to engage me in one of your ingenious battles of words. I speak of that wonderful influence my youngest one, and I could not let you lie on the of a rosy lip outweighs sometimes the resolves of a field." furrowed brow; and how the-pooh! I'm mak-Even the rollicking Murphy's eyes were moist as he ling a fool of myself talking to you-but to make a long story short, I would rather wrastle out a logical dispute than refute some absurdity which fell from a pretty mouth with a smile on it."

"Oh, I quite agree with you," said the doctor, grinning, "that the fathers are not half such dangerous customers as the daughters."

"Ah, go along with you, doctor!" said Father Phil, with a good-humored laugh. "I see you are in one of your mischievous moods, and so I'll have nothing more to say to you."

The Father turned away to join the Squire, while the doctor took a seat near Fanny Dawson and enjoyed a quiet little bit of conversation with her, while Moriarty was turning over the leaves of her album: but the brow of the captain, who affected a taste in poetry, became knit, and his lip assumed a contemptuous curl, as he perused some lines, and asked Fanny whose was the composition.

"I forget," was Fanny's answer. "I don't wonder," said Moriarty; "the author is not worth remembering, for they are very rough."

Fanny did not seem pleased with the criticism, and said that, when sung to the measure of the air written down on the opposite page, they were very flowing. "But the principal phrase, the 'refrain,' I may say, is so vulgar," added Moriarty, returning to the charge. "The gentleman says, What would you do?' and the

"I don't call that poetry," said Fanny, with some about making my excuses to the countess when she emphasis on the word; "but if you connect those two phrases with what is intermediately written, and read all in the spirit of the entire of the verses, I think there "Can you tolerate That's what I'd do'?—the pert answer of a housemaid." "A phrase in itself homely," answere I Fanny, "may become elevated by the use to which it is applied." "Quite true, Miss Dawson," said the doctor, joining

"Here they are," said Moriarty. "I will read them, if you allow me, and then judge between Miss Dawson and me. 'What will you do, love, when I am going, With white sail flowing,

The seas beyond? What will you do, love, when-

"Stop thief!-stop thief!" cried the doctor. "Why, you are robbing the poet of his reputation as fast as you can. You don't attend to the rhythm of those lines-you don't give the ringing of the verse."

"That's just what I have said in other words," said Fanny. "When sung to the melody, they are smooth." "But a good reader, Miss Dawson," said the doctor, "will read verse with the proper accent, just as a musician would divide it into bars; but my friend Randal there, although he can tell a good story and hit off prose very well, has no more notion of rhythm or poetry than new beer has of a holiday."

"And why, pray, has not new beer a notion of a holi-

"Because, sir, it works of a Sunday." "Your beer may be new, doctor, but your joke is not-I have seen it before in some old form."

"Well, sir, if I found it in its old form, like a hare, and started it fresh, it may do for folks to run after as well as anything else. But you sha'n't escape your misdemeanor in mauling those verses as you have done, by finding fault with my joke redevivus. You read those lines, sir, like a bellman, without any attention to meter,"

"To be sure," said Father Phil, who had been listen- to." ing for some time; "they have a ring in them-" "Like a pig's nose," said the doctor.

"Ah, be aisy," said Father Phil. "I say they have a ring in them like an owld Latin canticle-

What will you do, love, when I am go-ing, With white sail flowing, The says be-youd?"

That's it!" "To be sure," said the doctor. "I vote for the Father's reading them out on the spot."

"Pray do, Mister Blake," said Fanny. "Ah, Miss Dawson, what have I to do with reading love verses?"

"Take the book, sir," said Growling, "and show me you have some faith in your own sayings, by obeying a lady directly." "Pooh! pooh!" said the priest.

"You won't refuse me?" said Fanny in a coaxing

"My dear Miss Dawson," said the padre. "Father Phil!" said Fanny, with one of her rosy smiles.

"Oh, wow! wow!" ejaculated the priest, in an amusing embarrassment, "I see you will make me do whatever you like." So Father Phil gave the rare example of a man acting up to his own theory, and could not resist the demand that came from a pretty mouth. He took the book and read the lines with much feeling. but with an observance of rhythm so grotesque, that it must be given in his own manner.

WHAT WILL YOU DO, LOVE?

"What will you do, love, when I am go-ing, With white sail flow-ing, The seas be-yond? What will you do, love, when waves di-vide us,

And friends may chide us, For being fond!"

"Though waves di-vide us, and friends be chi-ding. In faith a-bi-ding, I'll still be true; And I'l pray for thee on the stormy o-cean, In deep de-vo-tion,—

"What would you do, love, if distant ti-dings Thy fond con-fi-dings Should under-new;

And I a-bi-ding 'neath sultry skies, Should think other eyes Were as bright as thine!"

That's what I'll do!"

"Oh, name it not; though guilt and shame Were on thy name, I'd still be true: But that heart of thine, should another shure it, I could not bear it; What would I do?"

"What would you do, when, home re-turn-ing, With hopes high burn-ing, With wealth for you-If my bark, that bound-ed o'er foreign foam, Should be lost near home,

Ah, what would you do?" "So thou wert spar-ed, I'd bless the mor-row, In want and sor-row, That left me you; And I'd welcome thee from the wasting bil-low-My heart thy pil-low!

THAT'S what I'd do!"* "Well done, padre!" said the doctor; "with good emphasis and discretion."

"And now, my dear Miss Dawson," said Father Phil, "since I've read the lines at your high bidding, will you sing them for me at my humble asking?"

"Very antithetically put, indeed," said Fanny; "but you must excuse me."

"You said there was a tune to it?" "Yes; but I promised Captain Moriarity to sing him this," said Fanny, going over to the pianoforte, and laying her hand on an open music book. "Thanks, Miss Dawson," said Moriarty, following

Now, it was not that Fanny Dawson liked the captain that she was going to sing the song; but she thought he had been rather "mobbed" by the doctor and the padre about the reading of the verses, and it was her good breeding which made her pay this little attention to the worsted party. She poured forth her sweet voice in a simple melody to the following words:

SAY NOT MY HEART IS COLD.

"Say not my heart is cold, Because of a silent tongue! The lute of faultless mold In silence oft hath hung. The fountain soonest spent Doth babble down the steep; For the stream that ever went Is silent, strong, and deep.

"The charm of a secret life Is given to choicest things: Of flowers, the fragrance rife is wafted on viewless wings; We see not the charmed air Bearing some witching sound; And ocean deep is where

"Where are the stars by day? They burn, though all unseen! And love of purest ray Is like the stars, I ween: Unmark'd is the gentle light When the sunshine of joy appears,

The pearl of price is found.

But ever, in sorrow's night, 'Twill glitter upon thy tears?" "Well, Randal, does that poem satisfy your critical taste? Of the singing there can be but one opinion." "Yes, I think it pretty," said Moriarty; "but there is one word in the last verse I object to."

"Which is that?" inquired Growling. "Ween," said the other; "the stars, I ween,' I object "Don't you see the meaning of that?" inquired the doctor. "I think it is a very happy allusion." "I don't see any allusion whatever," said the critic. "Don't you see the poet alluded to the stars in the milky way, and says, therefore, 'The stars I wean'?" "Bah! bah! doctor," exclaimed the critical captain;

"you are in one of your quizzing moods to-night, and 'tis in vain to expect a serious auswer from you." He turned on his heel as he spoke, and went away. "Moriarty, you know, Miss Dawson, is a man who affects a horror of puns, and therefore I always punish him with as many as I can," said the doctor, who was left by Moriarty's sudden pique to the enjoyment of a pleasant chat with Fanny, and he was serry when the hour arrived which disturbed it by the breaking up of the party and the departure of the guests.

CHAPTER XXXIV. WHEN the Widow Rooney was forcibly ejected from the house of Mrs. James Casey, and found that Andy was not the possessor of that lady's charms, she posted off to Neck-or-Nothing Hall, to hear the true account of the transaction from Andy himself. On arriving at the old iron gate, and pulling the loud bell, she was spoken to through the bars by the savage old janitor and told to "go out o' that." Mrs. Rooney thought fate was using her hard in decreeing she was to receive denial at every door, and endeavored to obtain a parley with the gate-keeper, to which he seemed no way inclined.

"My name's Rooney, sir!" "There's plenty bad o' the name," was the civil re-

"And my son's in Squire O'Grady's sarvice, sir." "Oh-you're the mother of the beauty we call Handy, eh?"

"Yis, sir." "Well, he left the sarvice yistherday."

* NOTE TO THE THIRD EDITION.—The foregoing dialogue and Moriarty's captions remarks were meant, when they appeared in the first edition, as a hit at a certain small critic—a would-be song writer—who does illnatured articles for the Reviews, and expressed himself very contemptuously of my songs because of their simplicity; or, as he was pleased to phrase it, "I had a knack of putting common things together." The song was written to illustrate my belief that the most common-place expression, eppropriate'n englied, may successfully serve the purposes of the lyric; and here experience has proved me right, for this very sonr of 3 What will you do?" (containing within it the other common-place, "That's what I'd do") has been received with special tave, by the public, whose long-contimued goodwill toward my compositions generally I gratefully acknowledge.

"Is it lost the place?"

"Oh dear! Ah, sir, let me up to the house and spake to his honor, and maybe he'll take back the boy," "He doesn't want any more servants at all-for he's

Alon I. "Is it Squire O'Grady dead?"

"Ayo-did yu never hear of a dead squire before?"

"What did he die of, sir?"

his den. It was true-the renowned O'Grady was no more. The fever which had set in from his "broiled bones," which he would have in spite of anybody, was found difficult of abatement; and the impossibility of keeping him quiet, and his fits of passion, and consequent fresh supplies of "broiled bones," cendered the malady unmanageable; and the very day after Andy had left the house the fever took a bad turn,

at peace. wedding parapernalia which had been brought down lay neglected in the rooms where it had been the ob- quaintance, any man worth a day's mate would have ject of the preceding day's admiration. The deep, absorbing, silent grief of the wife-the more audible sor- he was the best of husbands." row of the glils-the subdued wildness of the reckless boys, as they trod silently past the chamber where they no longer might dread reproof for their noise-all this was less touching than the effect the event had upon the old dowager mother. While the senses of others were stunned by the blow, hers became awakened by the shock; all her absurd aberration passed away, and she sat in intellectual self-possession by the side of her son's death-bed, which she never left until he was laid in his coffin. He was the first and last of her sons. She had now none but grandchildren to look upon- the rights of the church, and the rights of the law, and the intermediate generation had passed away, and the all the rights on your side; barrin' right rayson- that think I came shooting.* It's only to keep harm from gap yawned fearfully before her. It restored her, for | you never had; and sure without that, what's the use of | the innocent girl here." the lime, perfectly to her senses; and she gave the all the other rights in the world?" recessary directions on the melancholy occasion, and superintended all the sad ceremonials befitting the time, with a calm and dignified resignation which im- | then you would have had a stronger friend than any o' pressed all around her with wonder and respect.

Superadded to the dismay which the death of the head of a family produces was the terrible fear which existed that O'Crady's body would be seized for debt-a barbarous practice, which, shame to say, is still permitted. This fear made great precaution necessary to prevent persons approaching the house, and accounts for the extra gruffness of the gate porter. woman's hands quiet," The wild body-guard of the wild chief was on doubly active duty, and after four-and-twenty hours had pass- not," said Andy. ed over the reckless boys, the interest they took in sharing and directing this watch and ward seemed to them," said the mother, "and that would be some conoutweigh all sorrowful consideration for the death of solution. But even as it is, I'll have law for it.—I will apparent in a box not yet fifteen; and not only in him- mighty heavy in the hand. Oh, my poor eye!-it,s like self, but in the gray-headed retainers about him, a coal of fire-but sure it was worth the risk living with this might be seen: there was a shade more of de- her for the sake of the purty property. And sure I was present, and follow the Widow Rooney, who, as she the young turkeys and the childhre-but, och hone, conness of visage every hour. Her nose was twice its usual dimensions, and one eye was perfectly useless in thowing her the road. At last, however, as evening was closing, she reached her cabin, and there was Andy, arrived before her, and telling Oonah, his cousin, all his misadventures of the preceding day.

The history was stopped for a while by their mutual explanations and condolence with Mrs. Rooney, on the "cruel way her poor face was used." "And who done it all?" said Oonah.

"Who but that born divil, Matty Dwyer-and sure they towld me you were married to her," said she to Andy. "So I was," said Andy, beginning the account of his misfortunes afresh to his mother, who from time to time would break in with indiscriminate maledictions on Andy, as well as his forsworn damsel: and when the account was ended, she poured out a torrent of abuse pared with none of uz. Sure, if a gintleman was marto the floor in utter amazement.

"I thought I'd get pity here, at all events," said poor Andy; "but instead o' that it's the worst word and the hardest name in your jaw you have for me."

"And sarve you right, you dirty cur," said his mother. "I ran off like a fool when I heerd of your good fortune, and see the condition that baggage left me in-my teeth knocked in and my eye knocked out, and all for your foolery, because you couldn't keep what you got."

"Sure, mother, I tell you-"

"Howld your tongue, you omadhaun! And then I go to Squire O'Grady's to look for you, and there I hear you fost that place, too."

"Faix, it's little loss," said Andy.

"That's all you know about it, you goose; you lose the place just when the man's dead and you'd have had a shuit o' mournin'. Oh, you are the most misfortunate divil, Andy Rooney, this day in Ireland-why did I rear you at all?"

"Squire O'Grady dead!" said Andy, in surprise, and also with regret for his late master.

"Yis-and you've lost the mournin'-augh!"

"Oh, the poor Squire!" said Andy. "The illigant new clothes!" grumbled Mrs. Rooney. "And then luck tumbles in your way such as man never had; without a place, or a rap to bless yourself with, you get a rich man's daughter for your wife, and you let her slip through your fingers."

"How could I help it?" said Andy. "Augh!-you bothered the job just the way you do with-" everything," said his mother.

"Sure I was civil-spoken to her."

"Augh!" said his mother.

"And took no liberty." "You goose!"

"And called her miss."

"Oh, indeed you missed it altogether."

"And said I wasn't desarvin of her." "That was thrue—but you should not have towld her so. Make a woman think you're betther than her, and she'll like you." "And sure, when I endayvoured to make myself agreeable to her-"

" Endangeoured!" repeated the old woman contemptuyourself agreeable at once, you poor dirty goose?-no, but you went sneaking about it-I know as well as if I was looking at you-you went sneakin' and snivelin' until the girl took a disgust to you; for there's nothing a woman despises so much as shilly shallying."

"Sure, you won't hear my defince," said Andy.

"Oh, indeed you're betther at defince than attack," said his mother.

she took up the three-legged stool to me." "The divil mend you! And what civil'ty did you brained me.

Oonah set up such a shout of laughter at Andy's no-"Find out," said the sulky brute, walking back into tion of civility to a girl that the conversation was Oonah. stopped for some time, and her aunt remonstrated with her at her want of common sense; or, as she said, hadn't she "more decency than to laugh at the poor fool's nonsense?"

"What could I do agen the three-legged school?"

"Where was your own legs, and your own arms, and your own eyes, and your own tongue?-eh?"

"And sure I tell you it was all ready conthrived, and and in four-and-twenty hours the stormy O'Grady was 'James Casey was sent for, and came.' "Yis," said the mother, "but not for a long time, you What a sudden change fell upon the house! All the towld me yourself; and what were you doing all that time? Sure, supposing you wor only a new acdiscoorsed her over in the time and made her sinsible

"I tell you she wouldn't let me have her ear at all,"

said Andy. "Nor her cap either," said Oonah, laughing.

"And then Jim Casey kem." "And why did you let him in?" "It was she let him in, I tell you."

"And why did you let her? He was on the wrong side of the door-that's the outside; and you on the right—that's the inside; and it was your house, and she was your wife, and you were her masther, and you had

"Sure, hadn't he his friends, sthrong, outside?" "No matther, if the door wasn't opened to them, for them present among them."

"Who? inquired Andy. "The hangman," answered his mother; for breaking doors is hanging matter; and I say the presence of the hangman's always before people when they have such a job to do, and makes them think twice sometimes bes fore they smash once; and so you had only to keep one

"Faix, some of them would smash a door as soon a-

"Well, then, you'd have the satisfaction of hanging their father. As for Gustavus, the consciousness of for the property is yours, anyhow, though the girl is being now the master of Neck-or-Nothing Hall was gone-and indeed a brazen baggage she is, and is ference-the boy was merged in "the young master." thinkin' what a pleasure it would be living with you, But we must leave the house of mourning for the and tackin' your wife housekeepin', and bringing up tramped her way homeward, was increasing in hide- | you'll never do a bit o' good, you that got sitch careful Fringin' up, Andy Rooney! Didn't I tache you manners, you, dirty hanginbone blackguard? Didn't I tache you your blessed religion?—may the divil sweep you! Did I ever prevent you from sharing the lavings of the pratees with the pig? and didn't you often clane out the pot with him? and you're no good afther all? I've turned my honest penny by the pig, but I'll never make my money of you, Andy Rooney!"

There were some minutes silence after this eloquent outbreak of Andy's mother, which was broken at last by Andy uttering a long sigh and an ejaculation.

"Och? it's a fine thing to be a gintleman," said Andy. "Cock you up!" said his mother. "Maybe it's a gintleman you want to be; what puts that in your head, you omadhawn?"

"Why, because a gintleman has no hardships comupon her unfortunate forsaken son, which riveted him ried, his wife wouldn't be tuk off from him the way mine was."

"Not so soon, maybe," said the mother, drily. "And if a jintleman breaks a horse's heart, he's only a 'bowld rider,' while a poor sarvant is a 'careless blackguard' for only taking a sweat out of him. If a gintleman dhrinks till he can't see a hole in a laddher. he's only 'fresh'—but 'dhrunk' is the word for a poor man. And if a jintleman kicks up a row, he's a fine sperited fellow, while a poor man is a 'disorderly vagabone' for the same; and the Justice axes the one to dinner and sends th' other to jail. Oh, faix, the law is a dainty lady: she takes neople by the hand who can afford to wear gloves, but people with brown fists must keep their distance."

"I often remark," said his mother, "that fools spake mighty sinsible betimes; but their wisdom goes with their gab. Why didn't you take a betther grip of your luck when you had it? You're wishing you wor a jintleman, and yet when you had the best part of a jintleman (the property, I mane) put into your way, you let it slip through your fingers; and afther lettin' a fellow take a rich wife from you and turn you out of your own house, you sit down on a stool there, and begin to wish indeed!—you sneakin' fool—wish, indeed! Och! if you wish with one hand, and wash with th' other, which will be clane first-eh?" "What could I do agen eight?" asked Andy.

mother, quickly.

"Whisht, whisht, you goose!" said his mother. "Av yourself- 'The losing horse blames the saddle.'"

"Well, maybe it's all for the better," said Andy, "afther all."

"Augh, howld your tongue!" "And if it wasn't to be, how could it be?"

"Listen to him!"

"And Providence is over us all." mistakes they lay the blame on Providence. How have job we've made for them." you the impidence to talk o' Providence in that manner? I'll tell you where the Providence was. Provi- cabin. dence sent you to Jack Dwyer's, and kep Jim Casey ously. " Endayroured, indeed! Why didn't you make away, and put the anger into owld Jack's heart—that's what the Providence did!—and made the opening for you to spake up, and gave you a wife—a wife with must not see me when they come." property! Ah, there's where the Providence was-and you were the masther of a snug house—that was Providence! And wouldn't myself have been the one can. to be helping you in the farm-rearing the powlts, milkin' the cow, makin' the illigant butther, with lavings of butthermilk for the pigs-the sow thriving, "Sure, the first little civil'ty I wanted to pay to her, and the cocks and hens cheering your heart with their cacklin'-the hank o' yarn on the wheel, and a hank of ingins up the chimbley-oh! there's where the Providence would have been-that would have been Providence "I made a grab at her cap, and I thought she'd have indeed!-but never tell me that Providence turned you out of the house; that was your own gortherumfoodle." "Can't he take the law o' them, aunt?" inquired

"To be sure he can-and shall, too," said the mother. "I'll be off to 'torney Murphy to-morrow; I'll pursue her for my eye, and Andy for the property, and I'll put them all in chancery, the villains, "It's Newgate they ought to be put in," said Andy.

"Tut, you fool, Chancery is worse than Newgate; for people sometimes get out of Newgate, but they never get cot of Chancery, I hear." At las. Rooney spoke, the latch of the door was raised, and a miserably clad woman entered, closed the door immediately after her, and placed the bar against it. The action attracted the attention of all the inmates of the house, for the doors of the peasantry are universally "left on the latch," and never secured against intrusion until the family go to bed,

"God save all here!" said the woman, as she ap proached the fire,

"Oh, is that you, ragged Nance?" said Mrs. Rooney; for that was the unenviable but descriptive title the new-comer was known by; and though she knew it for her soubriquet, yet she also knew Mrs. Rooney would not call her by it if she were not in an ill temper, so she began humbly to explain the cause of her visit, when Mrs. Rooney broke in gruffly:

"Oh, you always make out a good rayson for coming; but we have nothing for you to-night."

Troth, you do me wrong," said the beggar, "if you

"Arrah, what harm would happen her, woman?" returned the widow, savagely, rendered more morose by the humble bearing of her against whom she directed her severity; as if she got more angry the less the poor creature would give her cause to justify her harshness. "Isn't she undher my roof here?"

"But how long may she be left there?" asked the woman, significantly.

"What do you mane, woman?" "I mane there's a plan to carry her off from you tonight." Conah grew pale with true terror, and the widow screeched, after the more approved manner of elderly ladies making believe they are very much shocked, till Nance reminded her that crying would do no good, and that it was requisite to make some preparation against the approaching danger. Various plans were hastily suggested, and as hastily relinquished, till Nance advised a measure which was deemed the best. It was to dress Andy in female attire and let him be carried off in place of the girl. Andy roared with laughter at the notion of being made a girl of, and said the trick would instantly be seen through.

"Not if you act your part well; just keep down the giggle, jewel, and put on a moderate phillelew, and do the thing nice and steady, and you'll be the saving of your cousin here,"

" You may deceive them with the dhress, and I may do a bit of a small shilloo, like a colleen in distress, and that's all very well," said Andy, "as far as seeing and hearing goes; but when they come to grip me, sure they'll find out in a minute.

"We'll stuff you well with rags and sthraw, and they'll never know the differ-besides, remember, the fellow that wants a girl never comes for her himself † but sends his friends for her, and they won't know the differ-besides, they are all dhrunk."

"How do you know?" "Because they're always dhrunk-- that same crew! and if they're not dhrunk to-night, it's the first time in their lives they were ever sober. So make haste, now, and put off your coat, till we make a purty young colleen out o' you."

It occurred now to the widow that it was a service of great danger Andy was called on to perform; and with all her abuse of "omadhaun," she did not like the notion of putting bim in the way of losing his life, perhaps.

"They'll murdher the boy, maybe, when they find

"Not a bit," said Nance.

"And suppose they did," said Andy, "I'd rather die, sure, than the disgrace should fail upon Oonah, there." "God bless you, Andy dear!" said Oonah. "Sure, you have the kind heart, anyhow; but I wouldn't for the world hurt or harm should come to you on my account."

"Oh, don't be afeard!" said Andy, cheerily; "divi a hair I value all they can do; so dhress me up at once." After some more objections on the part of his mother, which Andy overruled, the women all joined in making up Andy into as tempting an imitation of feminality as they could contrive; but to bestow the roundness of outline on the Angular form of Andy was no easy matter, and required more rags than the house afforded, so some straw was indispensable, which the pig's bed only could supply. In the midst of their fears, the women could not help laughing as they effected some likeness to their own forms, with their stuffing and padding; but to carry off the width of Andy's shoulders required a very ample and voluptuous outline indeed, and Andy "Why did you let them in, I say again?" said the 'could not help wishing the straw was a little sweeter which they were packing under his nose. At last, how-"Sure the blame wasn't with me," said Andy, "but ever, a?" r soaping down his straggling hair on hi: forebeau, and tying a bonnet upon his head to shade his face as much as possible, the disguise was completcourse you'll blame every one and everything but can and the next move was to put Oonah in a place of

> "Get upon the hurdle in the corner, under the thatch," said Nance.

"Oh, I'd be afraid o' my life to stay in the house at "You'd be safe enough, I tell you," said Nance; "fo once they see that fine young woman there," pointing "Oh! yis!" said the mother. "When fools make to Andy, and laughing, "they'll be satisfied with the Oonah still expressed her fear of remaining t the

"Then hide in the pratee-trench, behind the Louse,"

"That's better," said Oonah. "And now I must be going," said Nance; ", or they

* Going on chance here and there, to pick un Junt you

'This is mostly the case.

"Oh, don't leave me, Nance, dear," cried Oonah, "for I'm sure I'll faint with the fright when I hear them coming, if some one is not with me."

with many a blessing and boundless thanks for the fit of hysterics, and it accounted all the better for beggar-woman's kindness, Oonah led the way to the Andy's extravagant antics. little potato garden at the back of the house, and there ' 'Oh, the craythur is frightened out of her life!" said the women squatted themselves in one of the trenches | Bridget. "Leave her to me," said she to the men. and awaited the impending event.

ing horses at a sharp pace rang through the stillness of you're among friends-Jack is only dhrunk dhrinking the night, and the women, crouching flat beneath the your health, darlin', but he adores you." Andy verspreading branches of the potato tops, lay breath- screeched. to the widow's cottage and entered. There they found he'll marry you, darlin', like an honest woman!" the widow and her pseudo niece sitting at the fire; and three drunken vagabonds, for the fourth was holding the horses outside, cut some fantastic capers round the cabin, and making a mock obcisance to the widow, the spokesman addressed her with:

"Your sarvant, ma'am!" "Who are yiz at all, gintleman, that comes to my place at this time o' night, and what's your business?" "We want the loan o' that young woman there, ma'am," said the ruffian.

Andy and his mother both uttered little squalls. "And as for who we are, ma'am, we're the blessed society of Saint Joseph, ma'am-our coat of arms is coming up here, I'm sure " two heads upon one pillow, and our motty, 'Who's afraid -Hurroo! " shouted the savage, and he twirled ner. his stick and cut another caper. Then coming up to Andy, he addressed him as "young woman," and said of my bed for this night." there was a fine strapping fellow whose heart was breaking till he "rowled her in his arms."

Andy and the mother both acted their parts very well. He rushed to the arms of the old woman, for protect they're taking Jack away, and you're alone with myself "And how do you know, with the comforts I've towld, tion, and screeched small, while the widow shouted and will have a nice sleep." "millia murther !" at the top of her voice, and did not The men all the time were removing Shan More to give up her hold of the make-believe young woman until her cap was torn half off, and her hair streamed the cave were the coaxing tones of Bridget's voice, inabout her face. She called on all the saints in the viting Andy, in the softest words, to go to bed. callendar, as she knelt in the middle of the floor and rocked two and fro, with her clasped hands raised to heaven, calling down curses on the "villains and robbers" that were tearing her child from her, while they his charge thus:

face th' other way?" then in a side soliloquy, "By Jaker, I wondher at Jack's taste-she's a fine hunp of a girl, but her breath is murdher intirely-phew-young strategy. woman, turn away your face, or by this and that I'll fall off the horse. I've heard of a bad breath that of a seizure of the inanimate body of O'Grady for the of the day which was to witness the melancholy sight of might knock a man down, but I never met it tid now. Oh, murdher! it's worse it's growin'-I suppose 'tis the bumpin' she's gettin' that shakes the breath out of her ethrong-oh, there it is again-phew!"

It was well, perhaps, for the prosecution of the deceit, that the distaste the fellow conceived for his charge prevented any closer approaches to Andy's visage, which might have dispelled the illusion under which he still pushed forward to the hills and bumped poor Andy toward the termination of his ride. Keeping a sharp lookout as he went along, Andy soon was able to perceive they were making for that wild part of the hills where he had discovered the private still on the night of his temporary fright and imaginary reconnoifer with the giants, and the conversation he partly overheard all recurred to him, and he saw at once that not catch, a circumstance that cost him many a conjecture in the interim. This gave him a clue to the pernons into whose power he was about to fall, after having so far defeated their scheme, and he saw he should have to deal with very desperate and lawless parties. Remembering, moreover, the herculcan frame of the inamerato, he calculated on an awful thrashing as the smallest penalty he should have to pay for deceiving him, but was, nevertheless, determined to go through the adventure with a good heart, to make deceit serve his turn as long as he might, and at last, if necessary, to make the best fight he could.

As it happened, luck favored Andy in his adventure, for the hero of the blunderbuss (and he, it will be remembered, was the love-sick gentleman), drank profusely on the night in question, quaffing deep potations to the health of his Oonah, wishing luck to his friends and speed to their horses, and every now and then ascending the ladder from the cave, and looking out for the approach of the party. On one of these occasions, from the unsteadiness of the ladder, or himself, or perhaps both, his foot slipped, and he came to the ground with a heavy fall, in which his head received so severe a blove that he became insensible, and it was some time before his sister, who was an inhabitant of his deu, could restore him to consciousness. This she did, however, and the savage recovered all the senses the whisky had left him; but still the stunning effect of the fall cooled his courage considerably, and, as it were, "bothered" him so that he felt much less of the "gallant gay Lothario" than he had done before the accident.

The tramp of horses was heard overhead ere long, and Ehan More, or Big John, as the Hercules was called, told Bridget to go up to "the darlin'," and help her Cown,

"For that's a blackguard laddher," said he; "it turned undher me like an eel, bad luck to it!-tell her I'd go up myself, only the ground is slipping from unther me-and the laddher-" Bridget went off, leaving Jack growling forth anathe-mas against the ground and the ladder, and returned speedily with the mock-lady and her attendant squires. "Oh, my jewell" roared Jack, as he caught sight of his prize. He scrambled up on his legs, and made a rush at Andy, who imitated a woman's scream and fright at the expected embrace; but it was with much greater difficulty he suppressed his laughter at the neadlong fall with which Big Jack plunged his head "Widow machree, it's no wonder you frown, into a heap of turf, and hugged a sack of mult which bay beside it.

Andy endeavored to overcome the provocation to merriment by screeching; and as Bridget caught the sound of this tendency toward laughter between the Names yielded to Oonah's fears and entreaties, and screams, she thought it was the commencement of a

'There, jewel machreel' she continued to Andy, sooth-It was not long in arriving. The tramp of approach- ingly, "don't take on you that way-don't be afcered, less in the bottom of the trench, as the riders came up "But don't be afeered, you'll be thrated tender, and Andy squalled. "But to night, jewel-don't be frightened." Andy gave a heavy sob at the respite.

"Boys, will you lift Jack out o' the turf, and carry him up into the air? 'twill be good for him, and this dacent girl will sleep with me to-night."

Andy couldn't resist a laugh at this, and Bridget feared the girl was going off into hysterics again. "Aisy, dear-aisy-sure you'll be safe with me."

"Owl owl owl" shouled Andy. "Oh, murther!" cried Bridget, "the sterricks will be the death of her! You blackguards, you frightened her

The men swore they behaved in the genteelest man-

"Well, take away Jack, and the girl shall have share Andy shook internally with laughter. "Dear, dear, how she thrimblest" cried Bridget.

"Don't be so frightful, Lanna Machree-there, nowupper air; and the last sounds they heard as they left

CHAPTER XXXV.

THE workshops of Neck-or-Nothing Hall rang with threatened to stop her breath altogether if she did not the sounds of occupation for two days after the demise make less noise, and in the midst of the uproar drag- of its former master. The hoarse grating sound of the ged off Andy, whose struggles and despair might have saw, the whistling of the plane, and the stroke of the excited the suspicion of soberer men. They lifted him | mallet denoted the presence of the carpenter; and the up on a stout horse, in front of the most powerful man; sharper clink of a hummer told of old Fory, the family of the party, who gripped Andy hard round the middle "milliner," being at work; but it was not on millinery and pushed his horse to a hard gallop, followed by the Fogy was now employed, though neither was it legitimate cest of the party. The proximity of Andy to his cara- tinker's work. He was scrolling out with his shears, and Here made the latter sensible to the bad odor of the beating into form, a plate of tin, to serve for the shield pig's bed, which formed Andy's luxurious bust and on O'Grady's coffin, which was to record his name, age, bustle; but he attributed the unsavory scent to a bad and day of departure; and this was the second plate on breath on the lady's part, and would sometimes address which the old man worked, for one was already finished in the corner. Why are there two coffin-plates? Enter ' Young woman, if you plaze, would you turn your the carpenter's shop, and you will see the answer in two coffins the the carpenter has nearly completed. But why two cossins for one death? Listen, reader, to a bit of Irish > money-lender from whom this movement was dreaded the "narrow house," warranted the fear. Had O'Grady been popular, such a . In the evening of that day, however, the wall rose loud was to witness a trick of a more serious nature.

for the standard of the measurement of family grandeur | more difficult. was, too often, a liquid one in Ireland, even so recently as the time we speak of; and the dozens of wine wasted during the life it helped to shorten, and the posthumous gallons consumed in toasting to the memory of the departed, were among the cherished remembrances of hereditary honor. "There were two hogsheads of whisky drank at my father's wake!" was but a moderate boast of a true Irish squire, fifty years ago. retainers thronged to honor the obseques of their departed tion as the whisky got low; and songs in praise of their present occupation-that is, getting drunk-rang merrily round, and the sports of the field and the sorrows and joys of love resounded; in short, the ruling pasrustic wits, and was crowned by the song o: "Widow Machree" being universally called for by the company; and a fine-looking fellow with a merry eye and large white teeth, which he amply displayed by a wide mouth. poured forth in cheery tones a pretty lively air which suited well the humorous spirit of the words:-

WIDOW MACHREE

Och hone! widow machree: Faith, it rain- your looks, that same dirty black gown, Och hone! widow machree

How altered your hair With that close cap you wear-"Tis destroying your hair Which should be flowing free: Be no longer a churl Of its black silken curl,

"Widow machree, now the summer is come, Och hone! widow machree; When everything smiles, should a beauty look glunk Och hone! widow machree. See the birds go in pairs, And the rabbits and hares-

Och hone! widow machree.

Now in couples agree; And the mute little fish, Though they cant spake, they wish, Och hone! widow machree.

Why even the bears

III.

"Widow machree, and when winter comes in. Och hone! widow machree, To be poking the fire all alone is a sin, Och hone! widow machree, Sure the shovel and tongs

To each other belongs, And the kittle sings songs Full of family glee, While alone with your cup, Like a hermit you sup-

Och hone! widow machree.

Och hone! widow machree, But you're keeping some poor fellow out in the cowid, Och hone! widow machree.

With such sins on your head, Sure your peace would be fled, Could you sleep in your bed, Without thinking to see Some ghost or some sprite,

That would wake you each night, Crying, 'Och hone! widow machree,'

"Then take my advice, darling widow machree, Och hone! widow machree, And with my advice, faith I wish you'd take me Och hone! widow machres. You'd have me to desire

Then to sit by the fire; And sure hope is no liar In whispering to me That the ghosts would depart, When you'd me near your heart, Och honel widow machree,"

The singer was honored with a round of applause, and his challenge for another lay was readily answered, and It has been stated that an apprehension was entertained | mirth and music filled the night and ushered in the dawn debts it had contracted in life, and the harpy nature of the the master of an ample mansion being unde the tenant of

measure on the part of a cruel creditor might have been and long; the mirth which "the waking "permits had defied, as the surrounding peasantry would have risen en | passed away, and the ulican, or funeral cry, told that the masse to prevent it; but the hostile position in which he lifeless chief was being borne from his hall. That wild had placed himself toward the people al enated the cry was heard even by the party who were waiting to make natural affection they are born with for their chiefs, and | their horrid seizure, and for that party the stone-laden any partial defense the few flerce retainers whom indivi- collin was rent with a retinue of mourners through the old dual interest had attached to him could have made might | iron gate of the principal entrance, while the mortal rehave been insufficient; therefore, to save his father's re- mains were borne by a smaller party to the river inlet and mains from the pollution (as the son considered) of a bai- placed on the raft. Half an hour had witnessed a sham liff's touch, Gusiavus determined to achieve by stratagem light on the part of O'Grady's people with the bailiffs what he could not accomplish by force, and had two cof- and their followers, who made the seizure they intended, tins constructed, the one to be filled with stones and and locked up their prize in an old barn to which it had straw, and sent out by the front entrance with all the | been conveyed, until some engagement on the part of Oonah was the person alluded to, whose name he could demonstration of a real funeral, and be given up to the the heir should liberate it; while the aforesaid heir, as attack it was feared would be made upon it; while the soon as the shadows of evening had shrouded the river other, put to its legitimate use, should be placed on a raft in obscurity, conveyed the remains, which the myrniand floated down the river to an ancient burial-ground | dons of the law fancied they possessed, to its quiet and which lay some miles below on the opposite bank. A lonely resting place. The raft was taken in tow by a facility for this was afforded by a branch of the river | boat carrying two of the boys, and pulled by four lusty running up into the domain, as it will be remembered! retainers of the departed chief, while Gustavus himself and the scene of the beari-h freaks played upon Furlong | stood on the raft, astride over the coffin, and with an cel-spear, which had afforded him many a day's sport, While all these preparations were going forward, the performed the melancholy task of guiding it. It was a "waking" was kept up in all the barbarous style of old strangely painful yet beautiful sight to behold the gracetimes; enting and drinking in profusion went on in the ful figure of the fine boy engaged in this last ead duty; house, and the kitchen of the hall rang with joviality. with dexterous energy he plied his spear, now on this The feats of sports and arms of the man who had passed | side and now on that, directing the course of the raft, away were lauded, and his comparative achievements or clearing it from the flaggers which laterrupted its with those of his progenitors gave rise to many a stirring passage through the narrow inlet. This duty he had to anecdote; and bursts of barbarous exultation, or more attend to for some time, even after leaving the little inbarbarous merriment, rang in the house of death. There let; for the river was much overgrown with flaggers at was no lack of whisky to fire the brains of these revellers, this point, and the increasing darkness made the task

In the midst of all this action not one word was spoken; even the sturdy boatmen were mute, and the full of the oar in the rowlock, the plash of the water, and the crushing sound of the yielding rushes as the "watery bier" made its way through them were the only sounds which broke the silence. Still Gustavus betrayed no emotion; but by the time they reached the open stream, and that his personal exertion was no longer required, a change And now the last night of the wake approached, and the came over him. It was night-the measured beat of the oars sounded like a knell to him-there was darkness chief with an increased enthusiasm, which rose in propor- above him and death below, and he sank down upon the coilin, and plunging his face passionately between his hands, he wept bitterly. Sad were the thoughts that oppressed the brain and wrung the heart of the high spirited boy. He felt that his dead father was escaping, as it were sions of life figured in rhyme and music in honor of to the grave, - that even death did not terminate the con this occasion of death-and as death is the maker of sequences of an ill-spent life. He felt like a thief in the widows, a very animated discussion on the subject of night, even in the execution of his own stratagem, and widowhood arose, which afforded great scope for the the bitter thoughts of that sad and solemn time wrought a potent spell over after years: that one hour of misery and disgrace influenced the entire of a future life.

On a small hill overhanging the river was the ruin of an ancient early temple of Christianity, and to its surrounding burial-ground a few of the retainers had been duspatched to prepare a grave. They were engaged in this task by the light of a torch made of bog-pine, when the flicker of the flame attracted the eye of a horseman who was riding slowly along the neighboring road. Wondering what could be the cause of light in such a place, he leaped the adjoining fence and rode up to the grave-yard.

"What are you doing here?" he said to the laborers. They paused and looked up, and the nash of the torch fell upon the features of hdwaid O'Connor.

"We're finishing your work," said one of the men with malicious earnestness.

"My work?" repeated Edward. "Yes," returned the man more sternly than beforethis is the grave of O'Grady."

The words went like an ice-bolt through Edward's heart, and even by the torchlight the tormenter could see his victim grew livid.

The fellow who wounded so deeply one so generally beloved as Edward O'Connor was a thorough ruflian. His answer to Edward's query sprang not from love of O'Grady, nor abhorrence of taking human life, but from the opportunity of retort which the occasion offered upon one who had once checked him in an act of | of the bailiffs. brutailty,

Yet Edward O'Connor could not reply—it was a home thrust. The death of O'Grady had weighed heavily upon him; for though O'Grady's wound had been given in honorable combat, provoked by his own fury, and not producing immediate death; though that death had supervened upon the subsequent intractability of the patient; yet the fact that O'Grady had never been "up and doing" since the ducl tended to give the impression is itthat his wound was the remote if not the immediate cause of his death, and this circumstance weighed heavily on Edward's spirits. His friends told him he felt over keenly upon the subject, and that no one but himself could entertain a question of his total innocence of O'Grady's death; but when from the lips of a common peasant he got the answer he did, and that beside the grave of his adversary, it will not be wondered at that he reeled in his saddle. A cold, shivering sickness came over him, and to avoid falling he alighted and leaned for support against his horse, which stooped, when freed from the restraint of the rein, to browse on the rank verdure; and for a moment saddle, and from the depth of a bleeding heart came up | an agonized exclamation.

A gentle hand was laid on his shoulder as he spoke, and, turning round, he beheld Mr. Bermingham.

"What brings you here?" said the clergyman. "Accident," answered Edward. "But why should I say accident—it is by a higher authority and a better it is the will of Heaven. It is meant as a bitter lesson to human pride: we make for ourselves laws of honor, and forget the laws of God!"

"Be calm, my young friend," said the worthy pastor; "I cannot wonder you feel deeply-but command yourself." He pressed Edward's hand as he spoke, and left him, for he knew that an agony so keen is not benefited by companionship.

Mr. Bermingham was there by appointment to perform the burial service, and he had not left Edward's side many minutes when a long, wild whistle from the waters announced the arrival of the boat and raft, and the retainers ran down to the river, leaving the pine-torch struck in the upturned earth, waving its warm blaze over the cold grave. During the interval which ensued between the departure of the men and their reappearance, bearing the body to its last restingplace, Mr. Bermingham spoke with Edward O'Connor, and soothed him into a more tranquil bearing. When the coffin came within view he advanced to meet it, and began the sublime burial-service, which he repeated mo-t impressively. When it was over, the men commenced filling up the grave. As the clods fell upon the Joffin, they smote the hearts of the dead man's children; Jet the boys stood upon the verge of the grave as long as a vestige of the tenement of their lost father could be seen; but as soon as the coflin was hidden, they withdrew from the brink, and the younger boys, each taking hold of the hand of the eldest, seemed to imply the need of mutual dependence; as if death had drawn closer the bond of brotherhood.

There was no sincerer mourner at that place than Edward O'Connor, who stood aloof, in respect for the feellngs of the children of the departed man, till the grave was quite filled up, and all were about to leave the spot; but then his feelings overmastered him, and, impelled b a torrent of contending emotions, he rushed forward, and throwing himself on his knees before Gustavus, he held up his hands imploringly, and sobbed forth, "Forgive

The astonished boy drew back. "Oh, forgive me!" repeated Edward; "I could not help it; it was forced on me-it was---"

your sworn and trusty friend."

As he struggled for utterance, even the rough retainers were touched, and one of them exclaimed: "Oh, Mr. O'Connor, it was a fair fight!" "There!" exclaimed Edward-"you hear it! Oh, give me your hand in forgiveness!"

"I forgive you," said the boy, "but do not ask me to give you my hand to-night." "You are right," said Edward, springing to his feet-"you are right-you are a noble fellow; and now, remember my parting words, Gustavus:-Here, by the side of your father's grave, I pledge you my soul that through hife and till death, in all extremity, Edward O'Connor is

CHAPTER XXXVI.

WHILE the foregoing scene of sadness took place in the lone churchyard, unholy watch was kept over the second cottin by the myrmidous of the law. The usurer who made the seizure had brought down from Dublin three of the most determined bailiffs from amongst the tribe, and to their care was committed the keeping of the supposed body in the old barn. Associated with these worthies were a couple of ill-conditioned country blackguards, who, for the sake of a bottle of whisky, would keep company with Old Nick himself, and who expected, moreover, to hear " a power o' news " from the "gentleman " from Dublin, who in their turn did not object to have their guard strengthened, as their notions of a rescue in the country parts of Ireland were anything but agreeable. The night was cold, so, clearing away from one end of the barn the sheaves of corn with which it was stored, they made a turf fire, stretched themselves on a good stake-down of straw before the cheering blaze, and circulated among them the whisky, of which they had a good store. A tap at the door announced a new-comer; but the Dublin bailiffs, fearing a surprise, hesitated to open to the knock until their country allies assured them it was a friend, whose voice they recognized. The door was opened, and in walked Larry Hogan, to pick up his share of what was going, whatever it might be, saying:

"I thought you wor for keeping me out altogether." "The gintlemin from Dublin was afcard of what they cail a riskya" (rescue), said the peasant, "till I told them "twas a friend."

"Divil a riskya will come near yo" 'o-night," said Larry,

"you may make your minds alsy about that, for the people doesn't care enough about his bones to get their own broke in savin' him, and no wondher. It's a lantherumswash bully he always was, quiet as he is now. And there you are, my bold squire," said he, apostrophising the coilin which had been thrown on a heap of sheaves. "Faix, it's a good kitchen you kep', anyhow, whenever you had it to spind; and indeed when you hadn't you spint it all the same, for the divil a much you cared how you got it; but death has made you pay the reckoning at last—that thing that filly-officers call the debt o' nature must be paid, whatever else you may owe."

"Why, it's as good as a sarmon to hear you," said one

"O Larry, sir, discourses illigant," said a peasant. "Tut, tut, ' said Larry, with affected modesty: "it's not what I say, but I can tell you a thing that Docthor Growlin' put out on him more nor a year ago, which was mighty 'cute. Scholars calls it an 'epithet of dissipation,' which means getting a man's tombstone ready for him before he dies; and divil a more cutting thing was ever cut on a tombstone than the doctor's rhyme; this

'Here lies O'Grady, that cantankerous creature, Who paid, as all must pay, the debt of nature; But, keeping to his general maxim still, Paid it-like other debts-against his will." "

"What do you think o' that, Goggine?" inquired one bailiff from the other; "you're a judge o' po'thry." "It's sevare," answered Goggins, authoritatively, "but coorse. I wish you'd brile the rashers; I begin to feel the calls o' nature, as the poet says." This Mister Goggins was a character in his way. He had the greatest longing to be thought a poet, put execra-Edward envied the unconsciousness of the animal against | ble couplets together sometimes, and always talked as fine which he leaned. He pressed his forehead against the as he could; and his mixture of sentimentality, with a large stock of blackguardism, produced a strange jumble. "The people here thought it nate, sir," said Larry.

"Oh, very well for the country!" said Goggius; "but 'twouldn't do for town." "Misther Goggings knows best," said the bailiff who first spoke, "for he's a pote himself, and writes in the newspapers."

"Oh, indeed!" said Larry. "Yes," said Goggins, "sometimes I throw off little things for the newspapers. There's a friend of mine you see, a gentleman connected with the press, who is often in difficulties, and I give him a hint to keep out o' the way when he's in trouble, and he swears I've a genus for the muses, and encourages me-"

"Humph!" says Larry. "And puts my things in the paper, when he gets the editor's back turned, for the editor is a consaited chap that likes no one's po'thry but his own; but never mindif I ever get a writ against that chap, won't I sarve it!"

"And I dar say some day you will have it agen him, sir," said Larry. "Sure of it, a'most," said Goggins; "them litherary men is always in defliculties." "I wondher you'd be like them, then, and write at all,"

"Oh, as for me, it's only by way of amusement; attached as I am to the legal profession, my time wouldn't permit; but I have been infected by the company I kept. The living images that creeps over a man sometimes is irresistible, and you have no pace till you get them out o' your head."

"Oh, indeed, they are very throublesome," says Larry, "and are the litherary gintlemen, sir, as you call them, mostly that way?"

"To be sure; it is that which makes a litherary man: his head is full-teems with creation, sir."

"Dear, dear!" said Larry. "And when once the itch of literature comes over a man, nothing can cure it but the scratching of a pen." "But if you have not a pen, I suppose you must scratch any other way you can." "To be sure," said Goggins, "I have seen a litherary gentleman in a sponging-house do crack things on the wall with a bit of burnt stick, rather than be idle—they must execute." "Ha!" says Larry. "Sometimes, in all their poverty and difficulty, I envy the 'fatal fatality,' as the poet says, of such men in catching ideas." "That's the genteel name for it," says Larry. "Oh!" exclaimed Goggins; enthusiastically, "I know the satisfaction of catching a man, but it's nothing at all compared to catching an idea. For the man, you see, can give bail and get off, but the idea is your own for ever. And then a rhyme-when it has puzzled you all day, the pleasure you have in nabbing it at la-tl"

"Oh, its poth'ry you're spakin' about," said Larry. "To be sure," said Goggins; "do you think I'd throw away my time on prose? You're burning that bacon, Tim," said he to his sub.

"Poethry, agen the world!" continued he to Larry, "the Castilian sthraime for me!-Hand us that whisky" -he put the bottle to his mouth and took a swig--" That's good-you do a bit of private here, I suspect," said he, with a wink, pointing to the bottle.

Larry returned a significant grin, but said nothing. "Oh, don't be afraid o' me-I wouldn't 'peach-" "Sure it's agen the law, and you're a gintleman law," said Larry. "That's no rule," said Goggins: "the Lord Chief Justice always goes to bed, they say, with six tumblers o' potteen under his belt; and dhrink it myself."

"Arrah, how do you get it?" said Larry. "From a gentleman, a friend o' mine, in the Customhouse."

"A-dad, that's quare," said Larry, laughing. "Oh, we see queer things, I tell you," said Goggins, "we gentlemen of the law." "To be sure you must," returned Larry; "and mighty improvin' it must be. Did you ever catch a thief, sir?" "My good man, you mistake my profession," said Goggins, proudly: "we never have anything to do in the criminal line, that's much beneath us."

"I ax your pardon, sir." "No offence-no offence." "But it must be mighty improvin', I think, ketching of thieves, and finding out their tricks and hidin'-places, and the like?" "Yes, yes," said Goggins, "good fun; though I don't do it, I know all about it, and could tell queer things too."

"Arrah, maybe you would sir ?" said Larry.

* These bitter lines on a "bad pay" were written by a Dublin medical wit of high repute, of whom Dr. Growl ing is a prototype.

"Maybe I will, after we nibble some rashers-will you take share?"

"Musha, long life to you," said Larry, always willing to get whatever he could. A repast was now made, more resembling a feast of savages round their war-fire than any civilized meal; slices of bacon broiled in the fire, and eggs rousted in the turf-ashes. The viands were not objectionable; but the cooking! Oh!-there was neither gridiron nor frying-pan, fork nor spoon; a couple of claspknives served the whole party. Nevertheless, they satisfled their hunger, and then sent the bottle on its exhibarating round. Soon after that, many a story of burglary, robbery, swindling, petty larceny, and every conceivable crime, was related for the amusement of the circle; and the plots and counterplots of thieves and thief-takers raised the wonder of the peasants. Larry Hogan was especially delighted; more particularly when some trick of either villamy or cunning came out.

"Now women are troublesome cattle to deal with mostly," said Goggins "They are remarkably 'cute first, and then they are spiteful after; and for circumventin' either way are sharp hands. You see they do it quieter than men; a man will make a noise about it, but a woman does it all on the sly. There was Bill Morgan—and a sharp fellow he was, too-and he had set his heart on some silver spoons he used to see down in a kitchen windy, but the servant-maid, somehow or other, suspected there was designs about the place, and was on the watch. Well, one night, when she was all alone, she heard a noise outside the windy, so she kept as quiet as a mouse. By-and-by the sash was attempted to be riz from the outside, so she laid hold of a kittle of boiling wather, and stood hid behind the shutter. The windy was now riz a little, and a hand and arm thrust in to throw up the sash altogether, when the girl poured the boiling water down the sleeve of Bill's coat. Bill roared with the pain, when the girl said to him, laughing, through the windy, 'I thought you came for something,""

"That was a 'cute girl," said Larry, chuckling. "Well, now that's an instance of a woman's cleverness in preventing. I'll teach you one of her determination to discover and prosecute to conviction; and in this case, what makes it curious is, that Jack Tate had done the bowldest thing, and run the greatest risks, 'the eminent deadly,' as the poet says, when he was done up at last by a feather-bed."

"A feather-bed," repeated Larry, wondering how a feather-bed could influence the fate of a bold burglar, while Goggins mistook his exclamation of surprise to signify the paltriness of the prize, and therefore chimed be with him. "Quite true-no wonder you wonder-quite below a man of his pluck; but the fact was, a sweetheart of his was longing for a feather-bed, and Jack determined to get it. Well, he marched into a house, the door of which he found open, and went up-stairs, and took the best feather-bed in the house, tied it up in the best quilt, crammed some caps and ribbons he saw lying about into the bundle, and marched down stairs again but you see, in carrying off even the small thing of a feather-bed, Jack showed the skill of a high practitioner, for he descendhered the stairs backwards."

"Backwards!" said Larry, "what was that for ?" "You'll see by-and-by," said Goggins; "he descendhered backwards, when suddenly he heard a door open ing, and a faymale voice exclaim, 'Where are you going with that bed?'

"'I am going up stairs with it, ma'am, says Jack, whose backward position favored his lie, and he begun to walk up again.

"'Come down here,' said the lady, 'we want no beds here, man.

"'Mr. Sullivan, ma'am, sent me home with it himself, said Jack, still mounting the stairs. "'Come down I tell you," said the lady, in a great rage. 'There's no Mr. Sullivan lives here-go out of this with your bed, you stupid fellow.'

"I beg your pardon, ma'am, says Jack, turning round, and marching off with the bed fair and aisy. Well, there was a regular shilloo in the house when the thing was found out, and cart-ropes wouldn't howld the lady for the rage she was in at being diddled; so she offered rewards, and the dickens knows what all; and what do you think, at last discovered our poor Jack. "The sweetheart, maybe, said Larry, grinning at the thought of human perfidy. "No," said Goggins, "honor even among sweethearts. though they do the trick sometimes, I confess; but no woman of any honor would betray a great man like Jack. No -'twas one of the paltry ribbons that brought conviction home to him; the woman never lost sight of hunting up evidence about her feather-bed, and, in the end, a ribbon out of one of her caps settled the hash of Jack Tute." From robbings they went on to tell of murders, and at last that uncomfortable sensation which people experience after a feast of horrors began to pervade the party; and whenever they looked round, there was the collin in the

"Throw some turf on the fire," said Goggins, "tis burning low; change the subject; the tragic muse has reigned sufficiently long-enough of the dagger and the bowl-sink the socks and put on the buckskins. Leather away, Jim-sing us a song."

"What is it to be?" asked Jim. "Oh-that last song of the Solicitor-General's," sais Goggins, with an air as if the Solicitor-General were his particular friend.

"About the robbery?" inquired Jim.

"To be sure," returned Goggins. "Dear me," said Larry, "and would so grate a man as the Solicithor-General demane himself by writin' about robbers?" "Oh!" said Goggins, "those in the heavy profession of the law must have their little private moments of rol lickzation; and then high men, you see, like to do a bit of low by way of variety. The Night before Larry was stretched' was done by a bishop, they say; and 'Lord Altamont's Bull' by the Lord Chief Justice; and the Solicitor-General is as up to fun as any bishop of them all. Come Jim tip us the stave!"

Jim cleared his throat and obeyed his chief.

THE QUAKER'S MEETING.

"A traveller wended the wilds among, With a purse of gold and a silver tongue; His hat it was broad, and all drab were his clothes. For he hated high colors—except on his nose, And he met with a lady, the story goes.

Heighol was thee and nay thea.

"The damsel she cast him a merry blink, And the traveller nothing was loth, I think; Her merry black eye beamed her bonnet beneath, And the quaker be grinned, for he'd very good teeth, And he asked. 'Art thee* going to ride on the heath?' Heighot yea thee and nay thee.

" I hope you'll protect me, kind sir,' said the maid, As to ride this heath over I'm sadly afraid; For robbers, they say, here in numbers abound, And I wouldn't "for anything" I should be found, For, between you and me, I have five hundred pound." Heighol yea thee and nay thee.

" If that is thee own, dear,' the quaker he said, 'I ne'er saw a maiden I sooner would wed; And I have another five hundred just now, In the padding that's under my saddle-bow, And I'll settle it all upon thee, I vow!' Heighol yea thee and nay thee.

The maiden she smiled, and her rein she drew. Your offer I'll take, though I'll not take you;' A pistol she held at the quaker's head-' Now give me your gold, or I'll give you my lead, "Tis under the saddle I think you said." Heighof yea thee and nay thee.

"The damsel she ripp'd up the saddle-bow, And the quaker was never a quaker till now; And he saw by the fair one he wished for a bride His purse borne away with a swaggering stride; And the eye that looked tender now only defied. Heighol yea thee and nay thee.

"The spirit doth move me, friend Broadbrun,' quoth

To take all this filthy temptation from thee; For Memmon deceiveth, and beauty is fleeting; Accept from thy maai-d'n a right loving greeting, For much doth she profit by this quaker's meeting. Heigho! yea thee and nay thee.

" And hark! jolly quaker, so rosy and sly, Have righteousness more than a wench in thine eye, Don't go again peeping girl's bonnets beneath, Remember the one that you met on the heath. Her name's Jimmy Barlow-I tell to your teeth? Heighol yea thee and nay thee.

" " Friend James, quoth the quake, pray listen to me, For thou canst confer a great favor, d'ye see; The gold thou hast taken is not mine, my friend, But my master's-and on thee I depend To make it appear I my trust did defend. Heighol yea thee and nay thee.

Ho hre a few shots through my clothes, here and I's make it appear 'twas a desp'rate affair.' so Jim he popped first through the skirt of his coat, And then through his collar quite close to his throat. Now once through my broad-brim, quoth Ephraim, '1 Yole.

Heighol yea thee and nay thee.

" "I have but a brace," said bold Jim, "and they're spent, And I won't load again for a make-believe rent. 'Then,' said Ephraim-producing his pistols-' just give My five hundred pounds back-or, as sure as you live, I'll make of your body a riddle or sieve.' Heighel yea thee and nay thee.

"Jim Barlow was diddled, and though he was game, He saw Ephraim's pistol so deadly in aim, That he gave up the gold, and he took to his scrapers; And when the whole story got into the papers, They said that 'the thieves were no match for the quakers,' Heighol yea thee and nay thee."

"Well, it's a quare thing you should be singin' a song here, said Larry Hogan, "about Jim Barlow, and it's not over half a mile out of this very place he was hanged." "Indeed!" exclaimed all the men at once, looking with great interest at Larry. "It's truth I'm telling you. He made a very bowld robbery up by the long hill there, on two gintlemen, for he was mighty stout."

"Pluck to the back-bone," said Goggins. "Well, he tuk the purses aff both o' them; and just a he was goin' on afther doin' the same, what should appear on the road before him, but two other travelers, coming up forniust him. With that the men that was robbed cried out, 'Stop thief!' and so Jim, seein' himself hemmed 'n betune the four o' them, faced his horse to the ditch and took across the country; but the thravelers was well mounted as well as himself, and powdhered afther him like mad. Well, it was equal to a steeple chase a'most; and Jim, seein' he could not shake them off, thought the best thing he could do was to cut out some troublesome work for them; so he led off where he knew there was the devil's own leap to take, and he intended to 'pound' them there, and be off in the mane time; but as ill luck would have it, his own horse, that was as bowld as himself, and would jump at the moon if he was faced to it, missed his foot in takin' off, and fell short the leap and slipped his shouldher, and Jim himself usa a bad fall of it too, and av coorse, it was all over wid im-and up came the four gintlemen. Well, Jim had his , stols yet, and he pulled them out, and swore he'd shoot the first man that attempted to take him; but the gindemen had pistols as well as he, and were so hot on the whase they determined to have him, and closed on him. Jun fired and killed one o' them; but he got a ball in Le shouldher himself from another, and he was taken. Jim sthruy to shoot himself with his second pistol, but

4 The inferior class of quakers make THEE serve not only to own grammatical use, but also do the duty of THY

it missed fire 'The curse o' the road is on me, said

Jim; 'my pistol, missed fire, and my horse slipped his shouldher, and now I'll be scragged,' says he, 'but it's not for nothing-I've killed one o' ye,' says he."

"He was all pluck," said Goggins. "Desperate bowld," said farry, "Well, he was thried and condemued, av coorse, and was hanged, as I tell you, half a mile out o' this very place, where we are sittin', and his appearance walks, they say, ever since." "You don't say so!" said Goggins.

"Faith it's thrue!" answered Larry. "You never saw it." said Goggins.

"The Lord forbid!" returned Larry; "but it's thrue, for all that. For you see the big house near this barn, that is all in ruin, was desarted because Jhu's ghost used to walk."

"That was foolish," said Goggins: "stir up the fire, Jim, and hand me the whisky,"

"Oh, if it was only walkin', they might have got over that; but at last one night, as the story goes, when there was a thremendious storm o' wind and rain---"

"Whisht!" said one of the peasants, "what's that?" As they listened, they heard the beating of heavy rain against the door, and the wind howled through its chinks. "Well," said Goggins, "what are you stopping for?"

"Oh, I'm not stoppin'," said Larry; "I was sayin' that it was a bad wild night, and Jimmy Barlow's appearance came into the house and asked them for a glass o' sper'ts, and that he'd be obleeged to them if they'd help him with his horse that slipped his shouldher; and faith, afther that, they'd stay in the place no longer; and signs on it, the house is gone to rack and ruin, and it's only this barn that is kept up at all, because it's convayment for owld Skinflint on the farm."

"That's all nonsense," said Goggins, who wished, and awake an internal pang. nevertheless, that he had not heard the "nonsense."

"Come, sing another song, Jim." Jim said he did not remember one.

"Then you sing, Ralph."

"Then join me in a chorus," said Goggins, "for I'll sing, if Jim's arraid." "I'm not afraid," said Jim. "Then why won't you sing?"

"Because I don't like." "Ah!" exclaimed Goggins,

"Well, maybe you're afraid yourself," said Jim, "if you towld thruth."

"Just to show you how little I'm afeard," said Goggins, with a swaggering air, "I'll sing another song about Jimmy Barlow," "You'd better not," said Larry Hogan. "Let him rest in pace!" "Fudge!" said Goggins. "Will you join chorus, Jim?"

"I will," said Jim, fiercely.

"We'll all join," said the men (except Larry), who felt it would be a sort of relief to bully away the supernatural terror which hung round their hearts after the ghost story by the sound of their own voices.

"Then here goes!" said Goggins, who started another long ballad about Jimmy Barlow, in the opening of which all joined. It ran as follows:-

"My name it is Jimmy Barlow, I was born in the town of Carlow, And here I lie in the Maryborough Jail, All for the robbing of the Wicklow mail. Fol de rol de riddle-ido!"

As it would be tiresome to follow this ballad through all its length, breadth, and thickness, we shall leave the singers engaged in their chorus, while we call the reader's attention to a more interesting person than Mister Goggins or Jimmy Barlow.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

WHEN Edward O'Connor had hurried from the burialhorse to speed, anxious to fly the spot where his feel- violence. ings had been so harrowed; and as he swept along through the cold night wind which began to rise in quite insensible to external impressions, and he knew heavy breathing of his horse at any other time would have been signal aufficient to draw the rein; but still he pressed onward, and still the storm increased, and each acclivity was topped but to sweep down the succeeding slope at the same desperate pace. Hitherto the road over which he pursued his fleet career lay throuh an open country, and though the shades of a stormy night hung above it, the horse could make his way in safety road which skirted an ancient domain, whose venerable trees threw their arms across the old causeway, and added their shadows to the darkness of the night.

Many and many a time had Edward ridden in the soft company with Fanny Dawson, his guiltless heart full of hope and love; perhaps it was this very thought crossing his mind at the moment which made his present curcumstances the more oppressive. He was guiltless no longer-he rode not in happiness with the woman he adored under the soft shade of summer trees, but heard the wintry wind howl through their leasless boughs as he which was ringing through his heart. The darkness was intense from the canopy of old oaks which overhung the road, but still the horse was urged through the dark ravine at speed, though one might not see an arm's length before. Fearlessly it was performed, though ever and anon, as the trees swung about their heavy branches in the storm, smaller portions of the boughs were snapped off and flung in the faces of the horse and the rider, who still spurred and plashed his headlong way through the heavy road beneath. Emerging at length from the deep and overshadowed valley, a steep hill raised its crest in advance, but still up the stony acclivity the feet of the mettled steed rattled rapidly, and flashed fire from the flinty path. As they approached the top of the hill, the force of the storm became more apparent; and on reaching its crest, the fierce pelting of the mingled rain and hail made the spirit before he spoke. the horse impatient of the storm of which his rider was short snortings betokened his labor, and shook his head ward, but he was no longer safe. Quite blown, and simultaneous rush from the barn; and when they saw pressed over a rough descent, the generous creature, the would die rather than than refuse, made a false step, as A came heavily to the ground. Edward was stunned by the fall, though not seriously hurt; and, after a lapse of a few seconds, recovered his feet, but found the horse still prostrate. Taking the animal by the head, he assisted him to rise, which he was not enabled to do till after sev eral efforts; and when he regained his legs, it was manifest he was seriously lamed; and as he limped along with difficulty beside his master, who led him gently, it became evident that it was beyond the animal's power to reach hi own stable that night. Edward for the first time was now aware of how much he had punished his horse; he felt ashamed of using the noble brute with such severity, and became conscious that he had been acting under something little short of phrenzy. The consciousness at once tended to restore him somewhat to himself, and he began to look around on every side in search of some house where he could flind rest and shelter for his disabled horse. As he proceeded thus, the care necessarily bestowed on his dumb companion partially called off his thoughts from the painful theme with which they had been exclusively occupied, and the effect was most beneficial. The first violent burst of feeling was past, and a calmer train of thought succeeded; he for the first time remen, bered the boy had forgiven him, and that was a great consolation to him: he recalled, too, his own words, pledging to Gustavus his friendship, and in this pleasing hope of the future he saw much to redeem what he regretted of the past. Still, however, the wild flare of the pine-torch over the lone grave of his adversary, and the horrid answer of the grave-digger that ho was but "finishing his work," would recur to his memory

From this painful reminiscence he sought to escape, by looking furward to all he would do for Gustavus, and had become much calmer, when the glimmer of a light not far ahead attracted him, and he soon was enabled to perceive Ralph said every one knew he never did more than join | it proceeded from some buildings that lay on his right, not far from the road. He turned up the rough path which formed the approach, and the light escaped through the chinks of a large door, which indicated the place to be a coach-house, or some such office, belonging to the general pile, which seemed in a ruinous condition.

As he approached, Edward heard rude sounds of merriment, amongst which the joining of many voices in a "ree-raw" chorus indicated that a carouse was going forward within. On reaching the door he could perceive through a wide chink a group of men sitting round a turf fire piled at the far end of the building, which had no fire-place, and the smoke, curling upwards to the roof, wreathed the rafters in smoke; beneath this vapory canopy the party sat drinking and singing, and Edward, ere he knocked for admittance, listened to the following strange refrain:---

> " For my name it is Jimmy Barlow, I was born in the town of Carlow, And here I lie in Maryborough jail, All for the robbing of the Wicklow mail. Fol de rol de riddle-ido!"

Then the principle singer took up the song, which seemed to be one of robbery, blood, and murder, for it ran thus:-

"Then he cocked his pistol gaily, And stood before him bravely, Smoke and fire is my desire, So blaze away, my game-cock squire For my name it is Jimmy Barlow, I was born, dec."

Edward O'Connor knocked at the door loudly; the words he had just heard about "pistols," "blazing away," and, last of all, "squire," fell gratingly on his car at that moment, and seemed strangely to connect themselves with the previous adventures of the night and his place, he threw himself into his saddle, and urged his own sad thoughts, and he beat against the door with

The chorus ceased; Edward repeated his knocking. Still there was no answer; but he heard low and hurgusty fits, and howled past him, there was in the ried muttering inside. Determined, however, to gain adviolence of his rapid motion something congenial to the mittance, Edward laid hold of an iron hasp outside the fierce career of painful thoughts which chased each other | door, which enabled him to shake the gate with violence, through his heated brain. He continued to travel at | that there might be no excuse on the part of the inmates this rapid pace, so absorbed in bitter reflection as to be | that they did not hear; but in thus making the old door rattle in its frame, it suddenly yielded to his touch and not how far nor how fast he was going, though the creaked open on its rusty hinges; for when Larry Hogan had entered, it had been forgotten to be barred.

As Edward stood in the open doorway, the first object which met his eye was the coffin-and it is impossible to say how much at that moment the sight shocked him; he shuddered involuntarily, yet could not withdraw his eyes from the revolting object; and the pallor with which his previous mental unxiety had invested his check increased as he looked on this last tenement of morality. "Am I through the gloom; but now they approached an old to see nothing but the evidences of death's doing this night?" was the mental question which shot through Edwand's over-wrought brain, and he grew livid at the thought. He looked more like one raised from the grave than a living being, and a wild glare in his eyes rendered summer under the green shade of these very trees, in his appearance still more uncarthly. He felt that shame which men always experience in allowing their feelings to overcome them; and by a great effort he mastered his emotion and spoke, but the voice partook of the strong nervous excitement under which he laboured, and was hollow and broken, and seemed more like that which one might fancy to proceed from the jaws of a sepulchre than one of flesh and blood. Beaten by the storm, too, his hurried in maddened speed beneath them, and heard in hair hung in wet flakes over his face and added to his the dismal sound but an echo of the voice of remorse wild appearance, so that the men all started up at the first glimpse they caught of him, and huddled themselves together in the farthest corner of the building, from whence they eyed him with evident alarm.

Edward thought some whisky might check the feeling of faintness which overcame him; and though he deemed it probable he had broken in upon the nocturnal revel of desperate and lawless men, he nevertheless asked then to give him some; but instead of displaying that alacrity so universal in Ireland, of sharing the "creature" with a new-comer, the men only pointed to the bottle which stood besides the fire, and drew closer together.

Edward's desire for the stimulant was so great, that he scarcely noticed the singular want of courtesy on the part of the men; and seizing the bottle (for there was no glass), he put it to his lips, and quaffed a hearty dram of

"I must ask for shelter and assistance here," said Edheedless-almost unconscious. The spent animal with ward. "My horse I fear has slipped his shoulder-" Before he could utter another word, a simultaneous I assignately as the fierce hail-shower struck him in the roar of terror burst from the group; they fancied the eyes and nostrils. Still, however, was he urged down- ghost of Jimmy Barlow was before them, and made a and TI INE.

the horse at the door, another yell escaped them, as they is dar cy! Oh, mother, if you thought our urist as grandmamma, was, "for the nonce," her clos fled with increased speed and terror. Edward stood in poor girl was without a sheet this night!" amazement as the men rushed from his presence; he fol- And so Andy went on, spinning his bit of "linen man- in the world" grandmamma could want with Ratty; but lowed to the gate to recall them; they were gone; he nfacture" as long as he could, and raising Bridget's the secret was kept between them, for this reason, that could only hear their yells in the distance. The circum- wonder that, instead of the lament which abducted ladies the old lady kept the reward she promised Ratty for prestance seemed quite unaccountable; and as he stood generally raise about their "vartue," this young woman's serving it in her own hands, until the duty she required currence, a low neigh of recognition from the horse re- appealed to common sense if blankets were not good to which Ratty looked forward kept him faithful, minded him of the animal's want's and he led him enough in these bad times; insisting, moreover, that, as | Now, the duty Master Ratty had to perform was in. into the barn, where, from the plenty of straw, which | "love was warmer than friendship, so wool was warmer | structing his grandmamma how to handle a pistol; the tay around, he shook down a litter where the maimed than flax," the beauty of which parallel case neverthed bringing up quick to the mark, and leveling by "the animal might rest.

at the conduct of those whom he found there, and whom his presence had so suddenly expelled; and ever | charge, and reiterated the oft-repeated "Come to bed, I | stand on a chair and cover his grandmamma's eye with as he walked towards the fire, the coffin caught his eye. As a fitful blaze occasionally arose, it flashed upon the plate, which brightly reflected the flame, and Edward was irresistibly drawn, despite his original impression of horror at the object, to approach and read the inrecription. The shield bore the name of "O'Grady," and Edward recoiled from the coffin with a shudder, lish." and inwardly asked was he in his waking senses. He had but an hour ago seen his adversary laid in his grave, yet here was his coffin again before him, as if to harrow up his soul anew. Was it real, or a mockery? Was he the sport of a dream, or was there some had it," dreadful curse fallen upon him, that he should be forever haunted by the victim of his arm, and the call of vengeance for blood be ever upon his track? He breathed short and hard, and the smoky atmosphere in which he was enveloped rendered respiration still more difficult. As through this oppressive vapor, which seemed only fit for the nether world, he saw the coffin-plate flash back the flame, his imagination accumulated horror on of the fire was reflected, it seemed to him to burn, as it | the doses of punch, which, nevertheless, he protested he | by day, the strange mistakes and nervousness of his scene no longer, but rushed from the barn in a state of mind bordering on frenzy.

It was about an hour afterwards, near midnight, that the old barn was in flames; most likely some of the straw near the fire, in the confusion of the breaking up of the party, had been scattered within range of ignition, and caused the accident. The flames were seen for miles round the country, and the shattered walls of the ruined mansion-house were illuminated brightly by the glare of mined. the consuming barn, which in the morning added its own blackened and recking ruin to the desolation, and crowds of persons congregated to the spot for many days after. The charred planks of the coffin were dragged from lair. amongst the ruin; and as the roof in falling in, had dragged a large portion of the wall along with it, the stones which had filled the coffin could not be distinguished from those of the fallen building, therefore much wonder arose that no vestige of the bones of the corse it was supposed to contain should be discovered. Wonder increased to horror, as the strange fact was promulgated, and in the ready credulity of a superstitions people, the terrible belief became general, that his sable of a discovery and its consequences, prevailed over the majesty had made off with O'Grady and the party watching him; for as the Dublin bailiffs never stopped till they got back to town, and were never again seen in the couniry, it was most natural to suppose that the devil had made a hand of them at the same time. In a few days rumor added the spectral appearance of Jim Barlow to the tale, which only deepened its mysterious horror; and though, after some time, the true story was promulgated by those who knew the real state of the case, yet the truth never gained ground, and was con-idered but a clever sham, attempted by the family, to prevent so dreadful a story from attaching to their house; and tradition perpetuates to this hour the belief that the devil fleur away with O'Grady.

Lone and ruined as the hill was where the ruined house stood, it became more lone and shunned than ever, and the boldest heart in the whole country-side would quail to be in its vicinity, even in the day-time. To such a came more cautious. At length his head emerged from pitch the panic rose, that an extensive farm which encircled it, and belonged to the old usurer who made the they lay close around it-he must step over them to esseizure, fell into a profitless state from the impossibility | cape-he ascends still higher-his foot is on the last of men being found to work upon it. It was useless even as pasture, for no one could be found to herd cattle upon it; altogether it was a serious loss to the money-grubber; and so far the incident of the burnt barn, and the tradition it gave rise to, acted beneficially in making the inhuman act of warring with the dead recoil upon !

the merciless old usurer.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

WE left Andy in what may be called a delicate situation, and though Andy's perceptions of the refined were not very acute, he himself began to wonder how he should get out of the dilemma into which circumstances had thrown him; and even to his dull compreheusionn various terminations to his adventute suggested themselves, till he became quite confused in the chaos which his own thoughts created. One good idea, however, Andy contrived to lay hold of out of the bundle which perplexed him; he felt that to gain time would be an advantage, and if evil must come of his adventure, the longer he could keep it off the better: so he kept up his affectation of timidity, and put in his sobs and lamentations, like so many commas and colons, as it were, to prevent Bridget from arriving at her climax of going to bed.

for a young woman in distress of mind.

Andy protested he never could get a wink of sleep when his mind was uneasy. Bridget promised the most sisterly tenderness.

Andy answered by a lament for his mother. "Come to bed, I tell you," said Bridget. "Are the sheets aired?" sobbed Andy.

"What!" exclaimed Bridget, in amazement. "If your are not sure of the sheets bein' aired," said Andy, "I'd be afeard of catchin' cowld."

"Sheets, indeed!" said Bridget; "faith, it's a dainty lady you are, if you can't sleep without sheets."

"What!" returned Andy, "no sheets?"

"Divil a sheet." "Oh, mother, mother!" exclaimed Andy, "what would you say to your innocent child being the away to place where there was no sheets?"

"Well, I never heerd the like!" says Bridget. "Oh, the villains! to bring me where I wouldn't have a bit o' clane linen to lie in!" "Sure, there's blankets, I tell you."

"Oh, don't talk to me," roared Andy; "sure you know sheets is only dacent."

thing?"

and chattering his teeth, and exclaimed in a tremulous voice, "Oh, I've a thrimblin' all over me!"

"Loosen the sthrings o' you, then," said Bridget, about to suit the action to the word.

"Owl ow!" cried Andy, "don't touch me-I'm tick-"Then open the throat o' your gown yourself, dear," raid Bridget. "I've a cowld on my chest, and darn't," said Andy; "but I think a dhrop of hot punch would do me good if I

"And plenty of it," said Bridget, "if that'll plaze you." She rose as she spoke, and set about getting "the materials" for making punch.

Andy hoped, by means of this last idea, to drink Bridget into a state of unconsciousness, and then make his escape; but he had no notion, until he tried, what a capacity the gentle Bridget had for carrying tumblers of | time!-I know I can kill him-tremble, villain!" punch steadily; he proceeded as cunningly as possible, horror; and when the blaze sank, and but the bright red | and, on the score of "the thrimblin' over him," repeated | novelty for Rutty, it was all very well; but when, day were, with a spot of blood, and he could support the couldn't touch, unless Bridget kept him in countenance, grandmamma became less piquent from repitition, It glass for glass; and Bridget-genial soul-was no way did, it was not a tritle of stingo could bring her to a halt. Andy, even with the advantage of the stronger organization of a man, found this mountain lass nearly a match for him, and before the potations operated as he hoped upon her, his own senses began to feel the influence of

Still, however, he resisted the repeated offers of the couch proposed to him, declaring he would sleep in his clothes, and leave to Bridget the full possession of her

The fire began to burn low, and Andy thought he might facilitate his escape by counterfeiting sleep; so feigning Flumber as well as he could, he seemed to sink into insensibility, and Bridget unrobed herself and retired behind a rough screen.

It was by a great effort that Andy kept himself awake, for his potations, added to his nocturnal excursion, tended towards somnolency; but the desire of escape, and fear ordinary tendency of nature, and he remained awake, watching every sound. The silence at last became painful-so still was it, that he could hear the small crumbling sound of the dying embers as they decomposed and shifted their position on the hearth, and yet he could not be satisfled from the breathing of the woman that she slept. After the lapse of half an hour, however, he ventured to make some movement. He had well observed the quarter in which the outlet from the cave lay, and there was still a faint glimmer from the fire to assist him in crawling towards the trap. It was a relief, when, after some minutes of cautious creeping, he felt the fresh air breathing from above, and a moment or two more brought him in contact with a ladder. With the stealth of a cat he began to climb the rungs-he could hear the men snoring on the outside of the cave; step by step as he arose he felt his heart beat faster at the thought of escape, and bethe cave, and he saw the men lying about its mouth: rung of the ladder—the next step puts him on the heather -when he feels a hand lay hold of him from below!

His heart died within him at the touch, and he could not resist an exclamation. "Who's that?" exclaimed one of the men outside.

Andy crouched. "Come.down," said the voice softly from below; " if Jack sees you, it will be worse for you."

It was the voice of Bridget, and Andy felt it was better to be with her than exposed to the savagery of Shan More and his myrimidons; so he descended quietly, and gave himself up to the tight hold of Bridget, who, with many asseverations that "out of her arms she would not let her prisoner go till morning," led him back to the cave.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

'Great wit to madness nearly is allied, And thin partitions do the bounds divide."

So sings the poet; whether the wit be great or little. the "thin partition" separating madness from sanity is equally mysterious. It is true that the excitability attendant upon genius approximates so closely to madness, Bridget insisted bed was the finest thing in the world | that it is sometimes difficult to distinguish between them; but, without the attendant "genius" to hold up the train of madness, and call for our special permission and respect in any of its fantastic excursions, the most ordinary crack-brain sometimes chooses to sport in the regions of sanity, and, without the license, which genius is supposed to dispense to her children, poach over the preserves of common sense. This is a well-known fact, and would not be reiterated here, but that the circumstances about to be recorded hereafter might seem unworthy of belief; and as the veracity of our history we would not have for one moment questioned, we have ventured to jog the memory of our readers as to the close neighborhood of madness and common sense, befort we record a curious instance of intermitting madness in the old dowager O'Grady,

Her son's death had, by the violence of the shock, dragged her from the region of fiction in which she babitually existed! but after the funeral she relapsed into all her strange aberrations, and her bird-clock and her chimney-pot head-dress were once more in requisition.

The old lady had her usual attendance from her granddaughter, and the customary offering of flowers was rendered, but they were not so cared for as before, and "Bother, girl! Isn't a snug woolly blanket a fine Charlotte was dismissed sooner than usual from her morning's attendance, and a new favo. ite received in her | don't bring up your arm/ that way, like the handle of a eted companion. Many a guess was given as to " what lost in vam surmises as to the cause of the strange oc- principal complaint arose on the scarcity of flax. Bridget on his part should be accomplished, and the shilling a day less failed to reconcile the disconsolate abducted. Now sight," was explained; but a difficult arose in the old He then paced up and down the barn, lost in wonder Andy had pushed his plea of the want of linen as far as lady's shutting her left eye, which Ratty declared to be he thought it would go, and when Bridget returned to the | indispensable, and for some time Ratty was obliged to tell you!" Andy had recourse to twidding about his toes, his hand while she took aim; this was found inconven. ient, however, and the old lady substituted a black silk shade to obfuscate her sinister luminary in her exercises, which now advanced to snapping the lock, and knocking sparks from the flint, which made the old lady wink with her right eye. When this second habit was overcome, the "dry" practice, that is, without powder, was given up; and a "flash in the pan" was ventured upon, but this made her shut both eyes together, and it was some time before she could prevail on herself to hold her eye fixed on her mark, and pull the trigger. This, however, at last was accomplished, and when she had conquered the fear of seeing the flash, she adopted the plan of standing before a handsome old-fashioned looking-glass which reached from the ceiling to the floor, and levelling the pistol at her own reflection within it, as if she were engaged in mortal combat; and every time she snapped and burned priming she would exclaim, "I hit him that

As long as this pistol practice had the charm of was not such good fun; and when the rantipole boy, afloth; for living in a still, and among smugglers, as she | ter as much time as he wished to devote to the old woman's caprice, endeavored to emancipate himself and was countermanded, an outburst of "Oh, bother!" would take place, till the grandmother called up the prospective shillings to his view, and Ratty bowed before the altar of Mammon. But even Mammon failed to keep Ratty the liquor, and his caution became considerably under- loyal; for that heathen god, Momus, claimed a superior allegience; Ratty worshiped the "cap and bells" as the true crown, and "the bauble" as the sovereign sceptre. Besides, the secret became troublesome to him, and he determined to let the whole house know what "gran" and he were about, in a way of his own.

The young imp, in the next day's practice, worked up the grandmamma to a state of great excitement, urging her to take a cool and determined aim at the lookingglass. "Cover him well, gran," said Ratty. "I will," said the dowager, resolutely.

"You ought to be able to hit him at six paces " "I stand at twelve paces."

"No, you are only six from the looking-glass"

"But the reflection, child, in the mirror, doubles the distance. "Bother!" said Ratty. "Here, take a pistol-mind your eye and don't wink." "Ratty, you are singularly obtuse to the charme of science."

"What's science?" said Ratty.

"Science, child, is knowledge of a lofty and a strasnature, developing itself in wonderful inventions-grau powder, for instance, is made by science."

"Indeed it is not," said Ratty; "I never caw his name on a canister. Pigou, Andrew, and Wilks, or Mr Dara ford Mills, are the men for gunpowder. You know noth ing about it, gran."

"Ratty, you are disrespectful, and will not listen to instruction. I knew Kirwan-the great Kirwan, the chem ist, who always wore his hat---"

"Then he knew chemistry better than manners." "Ratty, you are very troublesome. I desire you listen, sir. Kirwan, sir, told me all about science, and the Dublin Society have his picture, with a bottle in his hand---"

"Then he was fond of drink," said Ratty. "Ratty, don't be pert. To come back to what I was originally saying-I repeat, sir, I am at twelve paces from my object, six from the mirror, which, doubled by reflec tion, makes twelve; such is the law of optics. I suppose you know what optics are?"

"To be sure I do."

"Tell me, then." "Our eyes," said Ratty.

"Eyes!" exclaimed the old lady, in amaze. "To be sure," answered Ratty, boldly. "Didn't I hear the old blind man at the fair asking charity 'for the loss of his blessed optics!"

"Oh, what lamentable ignorance, my child!" exclaimed the old lady. "Your tutor ought to be ashamed of himself."

"So he is," said Ratty. "He hasn't had a pair of new breeches for the last seven years, and he hides himself whenever he sees mamma or the girls."

"Oh, you ignorant child! Indeed, Ratty, my love, you must study. I will give you the renowned Kirwan's book. Charlotte tore some out of it for curl papers; but there's enough left to enlighten you with the sun's rays, and reflection and refraction--"

"I know what that is," said Ratty.

" W | at?" "Refraction."

"And what is it, dear?" "Bad behavior," said Ratty.

"Oh, heavens!" exclaimed his grandmother. "Yes, it is," said Raity, stoutly; "the tutor says I'm refractory when I behave ill; and he know Latin better than you." "Ratty, Ratty, you are hopeless!" exclaimed his grand

"No, I am not," said Ratty. I'm always hoping. And I hope Uncle Robert will break his neck some day, and leave us his money."

The old woman turned up her eyes, and exclaimed, "You wicked boy!"

"Fudge!" said Ratty; "he's an old shaver, and we want it; and indeed, gran, you ought to give me ten shillings for ten days' teaching, now; and there's a fair next week, and I want to buy things."

"Ratty, I told you when you made me perfect in the use of my weapon I would pay you. My promise is sacred and I will observe it with that scrupulous honor which has ever been the characteristic of the family; as soon as I hit something, and satisfy myself of my mastery over the weapon, the money shall be yours, but not till then." "Oh, very well," said Ratty; "go on then. Rendy-

"Oh, don't brake my heart that-a-way!" sobbed Andy; place. And "of all the birds in the air," who should this pump, but raise it nice from the elbow-that's it. Ready es sure, there's wool on any dirty sheep's back, but linem favorite be but Master Ratty-the caricat- -Are/ Ah! there you blink your eye, and drop the point jour pistol-try another. Ready-fire! That's better. ow steady the next time."

The young villain then put a charge of powder and wall into the pistol he handed his grandmother, who took steady aim at her reflection in the mirror, and at the words, "Ready-fire," bang went the pistol-the magnificent glass was smashed—the unexpected recoil of the weapon made it drop from the hand of the dowager, who screamed with astonishment at the report and the shock, and did not see for a moment the mischief she had done; but when the shattered mirror caught her eyes, she made a rush at Retty, who was screeching with laughter in the far corner of the room where he ran to when he had achieved his trick, and he was so helpless from the excess of his cachination, that the old lady enffed him without his being able to defend himself. At last he contrived to get out of her clutches and jammed her against the wall with a table so tightly, that she roared "Murder!" The report of the pistol ringing through the house brought all its inmates to the apot; and there the cries of murder from the old lady led them to suppose some awful tragedy, instead of a comedy, was enacting inside; the door was locked, too, which increased the alarm, and was forced in the moment of terror from the outside. When the crowd rushed in, Master Ratty rushed out, and left the astonished family to gather up the bits of the story, as well as they could, from the broken looking-glass and the cracked dowager.

CHAPTER XL.

O'Grady family had not altered Master Ratty's which clung from boyhood up to the age of fifteen was at once, by the sudden disrupture produced by events, thrown oil, and as singular a ripening into manhood commenced. Gustavue was of a generous nature; and even his faults belonged less to his organization than to the devil-maycare sort of education he received, if education it might be called. Upon his generosity the conduct of Edward O'Conner besides the grave of the boys father had worked strongly; and though Gustavus could not give his hand beside the grave to the man with whom his father had engaged in deadly quarrel, yet he quite exenerated Edward from any blame; and when, after a night more sleepless than Gustavus had ever known, he rose early on the ensuing morning, he determined to ride over to Edward O'Conner's house to breakfast, and commence that friendship which Edward had so solemnly promised to him, and with which the boy was pleased; for Gustavus was quite aware in what estimation Edward was held; and though the relative circumstances in which he and the late Squire stood prevented the boy from "caring a fig" for him, as he often said himself, et he was not beyond the influence of that thing ralled "reputation," which so powerfully attaches to and elevates the man who wins it; and the price at which Edward was held in the country influenced opinion even in Neck-or-Nothing Hall, albeit though "against the grain." Gustavus had sometimes heard, from the lips of the idle and ignorant, Edward sneered at for being "cruel wise," and "too much of a schoolmaster," and fit for nothing but books or a boudoir, and called a "piano man," with all the rest of the hackneyed "dirt" which jealous inferiority loves to fling at the heights it cannot occupy; for though—as it has been said—Edward, from his manly and sensible bearing, had escaped such sucers better than most men, still some few there were to whom his merit was offensive. Gustavus, however, though he sometimes heard such things, saw with his own eyes that Edward could back a horse with any man in the countrywas always foremost in the chase-could bring down as many brace of birds as most men in a day-had saved one or two persons from drowning; and if he did all these things as well as other men, Gustavus (though hitherto too idle to learn much himself) did not see why a man should be sneered at for being an accomplished scholar as well. Therefore he had good foundation for being pleased at the proffered friendship of such a man, and remembering the polgnancy of Edward's anguish on the foregoing eve, Gustavus generously resolved to see him at once and offer him the hand which a nice sense of feeling made him withhold the night before. Mounting his pony, an hour's smart riding brought him to Mount Eskar, for such was the name of Mr. O'Connor's residence.

It was breakfast-time when Gustavus arrived, but Edward had not yet left his room, and the servant went to call him. It need scarce be said that Edward had passed a wretched night; reaching home, as he did, weary in mind and body, and with feelings and imagination both overwrought, it was long before he could sleep; and even then his slumbers were disturbed by harassing visions and frightful images. Spectral shapes and things unimaginable to the waking senses danced and crawled and hissed about him. The torch flared above the grave, and that horred coffin, with the name of the dead O'Grady apon it, "murdered sleep." It was dawn before anything like refreshing slumber touched his feverish eyelids, and he had not enjoyed more than a couple of hours of what might be called sleep, when the servant called him; and then, after the brief oblivion he had obtained, one may fancy how he started when the first words he heard on waking were, "Mister O'Grady is below, sir."

Edward started up from his bed and stared wildly on the man, as he exclaimed, with a look of alarm, "O'Grady! For God's sake, you don't say O'Grady?"

"Tis Master Gustavus, sir," said the man, wondering at the wildness of Edward's manner.

"Oh, the boy! -ay, ay, the boy!" repeated Edward, drawing his hands across his eyes and recovering his self-possession. "Say I will be down presently." The man retired, and Edward lay down again for some minutes to calm the beavy beating of his heart which the audden mention of that name had produced; that name so linked with the mental agony of the past night; that name which had conjured up a waking horror of such might as to shake the sway of reason for a time, and which afterwards pursued its reign of terror through his sleep. After such a might, funcy poor Edward doomed to hear the name of O'Grady again the first thing in the morning, and we cannot wonder that he was startled.

A few minutes, however, served to restore his selfpossession; and he arose, made his toilet in haste. and descended to the breakfast-parlor, where he was met by Gustavus with an open hand, which Edward by Columbus.

"But the crosier," said Edward, "is amongst the most capable of bigher enjoyments than those to be derived interesting of Irish antiquities, and especially belongs to blooked on the handsome face of the boy, and saw in looked on the handsome face of the boy, and saw in interesting of Irish antiquities, and especially belongs to interesting of Irish collection, when you remember the earliest ine his instructions to book-learning only; there is much met by Gustavus with an open hand, which Edward by Columbus.

spoke not a word, but they understood one another; and that moment commenced an attachment which increased with increasing intimacy, and became one of those steadfast friendships which are seldom met with.

After breakfast Edward brought Gustavus to his "den," as he called a room which was appropriated to his own particular use, occupied with books and a small collection of natural relies. Some long ranges of that peculiar calf binding, with its red label, declared at once the contents to be law; and by the dry formal cut of the exterior, gave little invitation to reading. The very outside of a law library is repulsive; the continuity of that eternal buff leather gives one a surfeit by anticipation, and makes one mentally exclaim in despair, "Heavens! how can any one hope to get all that into his head?" The only plain, honest thing about law is the outside of the books where it is laid down-there all is simple; inside all is complex. The interlacing lines of the binder's patterns find no place on the covers; but intricacies abound inside, where any line is easier found than a straight one. Nor gold leaf nor tool is employed without, but within how many fallacies are enveloped in glazing words; the gold leaf has its representative in "legal action;" and as for "tooling," there is plenty of that!

Other books, also bore external evidence of the nature of their contents. Some old parchment covers indicated the lore of past ages; amidst these the brightest names of Greece and Rome were to be found, as well as those who have adorned our own literature, and implied a cultivated | urgent appeal with appropriate gesture, as the hand taste on the part of the owner. But one portion of the which held his crosier, after being raised towards library was particularly well stored. The works bearing on Irish history were numerous, and this might well ac-Thoran it is clear the serious events in the count for the ardor of Edward's feelings in the cause of the chief, who, fancying it was part of the ceremony, and his country; for it is as impossible that a river should run propensities in the least, the case was far different backwards to its source, as that any Irishman of a generwith Gustavus. In that one night of suffering which he ous nature can become acquainted with the real history had passed, the gulf was leaped that divides the boy of his country, and not feel that she has been an ill-used crosier?" he added, alluding to the one in Edward's col from the man; and the extra frivolity and carelessness and neglected land, and not struggle in the cause of her | lection, and manifestly excited by what he had heard. being righted. Much has been done in the cause since the days of which this story treats, and Edward was amongst those who helped to achieve it; but much has still to be amongst us." done, and there is glorious work in store for present and future Edward O'Connors.

Along with the books which spoke the cause of Ireland, the mute evidences, also, of her former ately. glory and civilization were scattered through the room. Various ornaments of elegant form, and wrought in the purest gold, were tastefully arranged over the mantel-piece; some from their form, indicating their use, and others only affording matter of ingenious speculation to the antiquary, but all bearing evidence of early civilization. The frontlet of gold indicated noble | estate, and the long and tapering bodkin of the same metal, with its richly enchased knob or pendant crescent, implied the robe it once fastened could have been of no mean texture, and the wearer of no mean rank. Weapons were there, too, of elegant form and exquisite workmanship, wrought in that ancient bronze, of such wondrous temper that it carries effective edge and point. The sword was of exact Phænician mould; the double-eyed spearhead, formed at once for strength and lightness, might have served as the model for a sculptor in arming the hand of Minerva. Could these be the work of an uncultivated people? Impossible! The harp, too, was there, that unfailing mark of polish and social elegance. The bard and barbarism could never be coeval. But a relic was there. exciting still deeper interest-an ancient crosier, of curious workmanship, wrought in the precious metals and partly studded with jewels; but few of the latter remained, though the empty collets showed it had once been costly in such ornaments. Could this be seen without remembering that the light of Christianity first dawned over the western isles in Ireland? that there the Gospel was first preached, there the work of salvation begun?

There be cold hearts to which these touching recollections do not pertain, and they heed them not! and some there are, who; with a callousness which shocks sensibility, have the ignorant effrontery to ask, "Of what use are such recollections?" With such frigid utilitarians it would be vain to argue; but this question, at least, may be put in return: - Why should the ancient glories of Greece and Rome form a large portion of the academic studies of enough of true and fond hearts to cherish the memory of her ancient glories, to give to her future sons the evidences of her earliest western civilization, proving that their foreathers were not (as those say who wronged and therefore would malign them) a rabble of rude barbarians. but that brave kings, and proud princes, and wise lawgivers, and just judges, and gallant chiefs, and chaste and lovely women among them, and that inspired bards were there to perpetuate such memories!

Gustavus had never before seen a crosier, and asked what it was. On being informed of its name, he then said, "But what is a crosier?"

"A bishop's pastoral staff," said Edward.

"And why have you a bishop's staff, and swords, and spears, hung up together?"

"That is not inappropriate," said Edward. "Unfortunately, the sword and the crosier have been frequently but too intimate companions. Preaching the word of peace has been too often the pretext for war. The Spaniards, for instance, in the name of the gospel, committed the most fearful atrocities."

"Oh, I know," said Gustavus, "that was in the time of bloody Mary and the Armada."

Edward wondered at the boy's ignorance, and saw in an instant the source of his false application of his allnsion to the Spaniards. Gustavus had been taught to vaguely couple the name of "bloody Mary." With everything bad, and that of "good Queen Bess" with all that was glorious; and the word "Spanish," in poor Gusty's head, had been hitherto connected with two ideas, namely. "liquorice" and the "Armada."

Edward, without wounding the sensitive shame of igunder Cortez and Pizarro. For the first time in his life Gustavus was aware that Pizarro was a real character. He had heard his grandmamma speak of a play of that name, and how great Mr. to its belonging to history, it was a new light-the utmost Gusty knew about America being that it was discovered preaching of Christianity in the western isles was in treland."

"I did only no that," said the boy.

"Then you don't know why the shamrock is our national emblem?"

"No," said Gustavus, "though I take care to mount one in my hat every Patrick's day."

"Well," said Edward, anxious to give Gustavna credit for any knowledge he possessed, "you know at least it is connected with the memory of St. Patrick, though you don't know why. I will tell you. When St. Patrick first preached the Christian faith in Ireland, before a powerful chief and his people, when he spoke of one God, and of the Trinity, the chief asked how one could be in three. St. Patrick, instead of attempting a theological definition of the faith, thought a simple image would best serve to enlighten a simple people, and stooping to the earth he plucked from the green sod a shamrock, and holding up the trefoil before them, he bade them there behold one in three. The chief, struck by the illustration, asked at once to be baptized, and all his sept followed his example."

"I never heard that before," said Gusty. "The very beautiful."

"I will tell you comething else connected with it," said Edward.

"After baptizing the chief, St. Patrick made an eloquent exhortation to the assembled multitude, and in the course of his address, while enforcing his heaven, descended again towards the earth, the point of his staff, armed with metal, was driven through the foot of but a necessary testing of the firmness of his faith, never winced "

"He was a fine fellow," said Gusty. "And is that the

"No," said Edward, "but one of early date, and belonging to some of the first preachers of the gospel

"And have you other things here with such beautiful stories belonging to them?" inquired Gusty, eager for more of that romantic lore which youth loves so passion-

"Not that I know of," answered Edward; "but if these objects here had only tongues, if every sword, and belt, and spear-head, and golden bodkin, and other trinket could speak, no doubt we should hear stirring stories of gallant warriors and their ladye-loves."

"Aye, that would be something to hear!" exclaimed Gusty

"Well," said Edward, "you may have many such stories by reading the history of your country; which if you have not read, I can lend you books enough." "Oh, thank you," said Gusty; "I should like it so

Edward approached the book-shelf and selected a volume he thought the most likely to interest so little practiced a reader; and when he turned round he saw Gusty poising in his hand an antique Irish sword of bronze.

"Do you know what that is?" inquired Edward. "I can't tell you the name of it," answered Gusty, "but I suppose it was something to stick a fellow." Edward smiled at the characteristic reply, and told atm it was an antique Irish sword. "A sword?" he exclaimed. "Isn't it short for a eword ?"

"All the swords of that day were short," "When was that?" inquired the boy. "Somewhere about two thousand years ago."

"Two thousand years," exclaimed Gusty, in surprise. "How is it possible you can tell this is two thousand years old?"

" Because it is made of the same metal and of the same shape as the swords found at Cannæ, where the Carthaginians fought the Romans."

"I know the Roman history," said Gusty, eager to display his little bit of knowledge; "I know the Roman history. Romulus and Remus were educated by a wolf." Edward could not resist a smile, which he soon suppressed, and continued:-"Such works as you our youth?-why should the evidences of their arts and now hold in your hand are found in quantities in their arms be held precious in museums, and similar evi- Ireland, and seldom anywhere else in Europe, exdences of ancient cultivation be despised because they cept in Italy, particularly at Canna, where some pertain to another nation? Is it because they are Irish | thousands of Carthaginlans fell; and when we they are held in contempt? Alas! in many cases it is so- find the sword of the same make and metal in places ay, and even (shame to say) within her own shores. But so remote, it establishes a strong connecting link between never may that day arrive when Ireland shall be without | the people of Carthage and of Ireland, and at once shows their date."

"How ourious that is!" exclaimed Gusty; "and how odd I never heard it before! Are there many such curious things you know?"

" Many," said Edward. "I wonder how people can find out such odd things," said the boy. "My dear boy," said Edward, "after getting a certain amount of knowledge, other knowledge comes very fast; it gathers like a snowball-or perhaps it would be better to illustrate the fact by a milldam. You know, when the water is low in the milldam, the miller cannot drive his wheel; but the moment the water comes up to a certain level it has force to work the mill. And so it is with knowledge; when once you get it up to a certain level, you can work your mill, with this great advantage over the milldam, that the stream of knowledge, once reaching the working level, never runs dry." "Oh, I wish I knew as much as you do," exclaimed Gusty.

"And so you can if you wish it," said Edward. Gusty sighed heavily, and admitted he had been very idle. Edward told him he had pleuty of time before him to repair the damage.

A conversation then ensued, perfectly frank on the part of the boy, and kind on Edward's side to all his deficiencies, which he found to be lamentable, as far as learning went. He had some small smattering of Latin; but Guetayus vowed steady attention to his tutor and his studies for the future. Edward, knowing what a miserable scholar the tutor himself was, offered to put Gustavus through his Latin and Greek himself. Gustavus accepted norant youth, gently set him right, and made him aware the offer with gratitude, and rode over every day to he had alluded to the conduct of the Spaniards in America | Mount Eskar for his lesson; and, under the intelligent explanations of Edward, the difficulties which trad hitherto discouraged him disappeared, and it was surprising what progress he made. At the same time he devoured Irish history, and became rapidly tinc-Kemble was in Rollo, and how he saved a child; but as tured with that enthusiastic love of all that belonged to his country which he found in his teacher; and Edward soon hailed in the ardent neophyte, a noble and intelligent spirit redcemed from ignorance and rendered time, when the frequency of Gusty's visits to Mount Eskar ceased to excite any wonder at home, he someimes spent several days together with Edward, to whom he became continually more and more attached. Edward showed great judgment in making his training attractive to his pupil: he did not attend merely to his head; he thought of other things as well; joined him in the sports and exercises he knew, and taught him those in which he was uninstructed. Fencing, for instance, was one of these; Edward was a tolerable master of his foil, and in a few months Gustavus, under his tuition, could parry a thrust and make no bad attempt at a hit himself. His improvement in every way was so remarkable, that it was noticed by all, and its cause did not long remain secret; and when it was known, Edward O'Connor's character stood higher than ever, and the whole country said it was a lucky day for Gusty O'Grady that he found auch a friend.

As the limits of the story would not permit the intercourse between Edward and Gustavus to be treated in detail, this general sketch of it has been given; and in | nod. e ating its consequences so far, a peep into the future has been granted by the author, with a benevolence seldom belonging to his ill-natured and crafty tribe, who endeavor to hoodwink their docile followers as much as possible, and keep them in a state of ignorance as to coming events. But now, having been so indulgent, we must beg to lay hold of the skirts of our readers and pull them back again down the ladder into the private still, where Bridget pulled back Andy very much after the same fashion, and the results of which we must treat of in our next chapter.

CHAPTER XLI.

When Bridget dragged Andy back and insisted on his going to bed ---

No-I will not be too good natured and tell my story in that way; besides it would be a very difficult matter to tell it; and why should an author, merely to oblige people, get himself involved in a labyrith of difficulties, and rack his unfortunate brain to pick and choose words properly to tell his story, yet at the same time to lead his readers through the mazes of this very ticklish adventure, without a single thorn scratching their delicate feelings, or as much as making the smallest rent in the white muslin robe of propriety? So, not to run unnecessary risks, the story must go on another way.

When Shan More and the rest of the "big blackguards" began to wake, the morning after the abduction, and gave | a turn or two under their heather coverlid, and rubbed their eyes as the sun peeped through the "curtains of the zast "-for these were the only bed-curtains Shan More and his companions ever had—they stretched themselves and yawned, and felt very thirsty, for they had all been blind drunk the night before, be it remembered; and Shan More, to use his own expressive and poetic imagery, swore that his tongue was "as rough as a rat's back," while his companions went no further than saying theirs were as "dry as a lime-burner's wig." We should not be so particular in those minute details but for that desire of truth which has guided us all through this veracious history; and as in this scene, in particular, we feel our selves sure to be held seriously responsible for everword, we are determined to be accurate to a nicety, and set down every syllable with stenographic strictness.

"Where's the girl?" cried Shan, not yet sober. "She's asleep with your sister," was the answer.

"Down-stairs?" inquired Shan.

"Yes," said the other, who now knew that Big Jack was more drunk than he at first thought him, by his using the words stairs; for Jack when he was drunk was very grand, and called down the ladder "down-stairs."

"Get me a drink o' wather," said Jack, "for I'm words till I wet my mouth."

pitcher full of water was handed to the master, who was cryin' like a spout afther a thunder-storm, and said heaved it upwards to his head and drank as audibly and her characther would be ruined when the story got abroad nearly as much as a horse. Then holding his hands to receive the remaining contents of the pitcher, which his followers poured into his monstrous palms, he soused his face, which he afterwards wiped in a wisp of grassthe only towel of Jack's which was not then at the wash.

Having thus made his toilet, Big Jack went down stairs, and as soon as his great bull-head had disappeared beneath the trap, one of the men above said, "We'll have a shilloe soon, boys."

And sure enough they did before long hear an extraordinary row. Jack first roared for Bridget, and no anawer was returned; the call was repeated with as little effect, and at last a most tremendous roar was heard above, but not from a female voice. Jack was heard below, swearing like a trooper, and, in a minute or two. back he rushed "up stairs," and began cursing his myrmidons most awfully, and foaming at the mouth with

"What's the matther?" cried the men.

"Matther!" roared Jack; "oh, you 'tarnal villains! You're a purty set to carry off a girl for a man-a purty job you've made of it!"

" Arrah, didn't we bring her to you?" " Her, indeed-bring her-much good what you brought is to mel" "Tare an' ounsi what's the matther at all? We dunna what you mean!" shouted the men, returning rage for

"Come down, and you'll see what's the matther," said Jack, descending the ladder; and the men hastened after him.

He led the way to the further end of the cabin, where a small glimmering of light was permitted to enter from the top, and lifting a tattered piece of canvas, which served as a screen to the bed, he exclaimed, with a curse, "Look there, you blackguards!"

The men gave a shout of surprise, for-what do you think they saw !-- An empty bed!

CHAPTER XLIL

It may be remembered that, on Father Phil's recommendation, Andy was to be removed out of the country to place him beyond the reach of Larry Hogan's machinations, and that the proposed journey to London afforded a good opportunity of taking him out of the way. Andy | as the showers of kisses from Oonah's ripe lips fell fast had been desired by Squire Egan to repair to Merryvale; upon him he was not insensible to the embrace of so very it makes those under its influence liable to say and enact but as some days had elapsed and Andy had not made pretty a girl—a girl, moreover, he had always had a his appearance, the alarms of the Squire that Andy might "sneaking kindness" for, which Consh's distance of

to be learned by living with the educated, whose current | be tampered with began to revive, and Dick Dawson was conversation alone is instructive; and Edward had Gus- therefore requested to call at the Widow Rooney's cabin as tavus with him as constantly as he could; and after some he was returning from the town, where some business with Murphy, about the petition against Scatterbrain's return, demanded his presence.

Dick, as it happened, had no need to call at the widow's, for on his way to the town who should he see approaching but the renowned Andy himself. On coming up to him, Dick pulled up his horse, and Andy pulled off his hat.

"God save your honor," said Andy. "Why didn't you come to Merryvale, as you were bid?" said Dick.

"I couldn't, sir, becase-" "Hold your tongue, you thief; you know you never can do what you're bid-you are always wrong one way or other,"

"You're hard on me, Misther Dick."

"Did you ever do anything right?-I ask yourself." "Indeed, sir, this time it was a rale bit o' business I had to do."

"And well you did it, no doubt. Did you marry any one lately?" said Dick, with a waggish grin and a wink. "Faix, then, maybe I did," said Andy, with a knowing

"And I hope Matty is well?" said Dick.

"Ah, Misther Dick, you're always goin' on with your jokin' so you are. So, you heard o' that job, did you? Faix, a purty lady she is-oh, it's not her at all I am married to, but another woman."

"Another woman!" exclaimed Dick, in surprise. "Yis, sir, another woman-a kind craythur." "Another woman!" reiterated Dick, laughing! "married to two women in two days! Why you're worse than a Turk!" "Ah, Misther Dick!"

"You Tarquin!" "Sure, sir, what harm's in it?"

"You Heliogabalus!!"

"Sure, it's no fault o' mine, sir?" "Bigamy, by this and that, flat bigamy! You'll only be hanged, as sure as your name's Andy." "Sure, let me tell you how it was, sir, and you'll see I am quit of all harm, good or bad. 'Twas a pack o'

blackguards, you see, come to take off Oonah, sir." "Oh, a case of abduction!" "Yis, sir; so the women dhressed me up as a girl, and the blackguards, instead of the seduction of Oonah, only reduced me."

"Capital!" cried Dick; "well done, Andy! And who seduced you?"

"Shan More, faith-no less."

"Ho, ho! a dangerous customer to play tricks on, "Sure enough, faith, and that's partly the rayson of what happened; but, by good luck, Big Jack was blind dhrunk when I got there, and I shammed screechin' so well that his sister took pity on me, and said she'd keep me safe from harm in her own bed that night." Dick gave a "view hallo" when he heard this, and shouted with laughter, delighted at the thought of Shan More, instead of carrying off a girl for himself, introducing a gallant to his own sister.

"Oh, now I see how you are married," said Dick: "that was the biter bit indeed."

"Oh, the divil a bit I'd ha' bit her only for the cross luck with me, for I wanted to schame off out o' the place, and escape; but she wouldn't let me, and cotch me and brought me back."

"I should think she would, Indeed," said Dick, laughing. "What next?"

"Why I drank a power o'punch, sir, and was off my guard. you see, and couldn't keep the sayeret so well afther that, and by dad she found it out."

"Just what I would expect of her," said Dick. "Well, do you know, sir, though the thrick was agen

her own brother, she laughed at it a power, and said I was a great divil, but that she couldn't blame me. So then I'd struv to coax her to let me make my escape, but she told me to wait a bit till the men above were faster thundherin' thirsty, and can't deludher that girl with soft | asleep; but while I was waitin' for them to go to sleep, faix, I went to asleep myself, I was so tired; and His attendant vagabond obeyed the order, and a large | when Bridget, the craythur, 'woke me in the morning, she over the counthry, and sure she darn't face the world if I wouldn't make her an honest woman."

"The brazen baggage," said Dick, "and what did you

"Why, what could any man say, sir, afther that? Sure her karacther would be gone if---" "Gone," said Dick, "faith it might have gone further before it fared worse!" "Arrah! what do you mane, Misther Dick?"

"Pooh, pooh! Andy-you don't mean to say you married that one?"

" Faix, I did," said Andy. "Well, Andy," said Dick, grinning, "by the powers. you hars done it this time! Good morning to you!" and Dick put spurs to his horse.

CHAPTER XLIII.

ANDY, "knocked all of a heap," stood in the middle of the road, looking after Dick as he cantered down the slope. It was seldom poor Andy was angry-but he felt a strong sense of indignation choking him as Dick's parting words still rung in his ears, "What does he mane?" said Andy, talking aloud; "what does he mane?" he repeated, anxious to doubt and therefore question the obvious construction which Dick's words bore, "Misther Dick is fond of a joke, and maybe this is one of his making; but if it is, 'tis not a fair one, 'pou my sowl: a poor man has his feelin's as well as a rich man. How would you like your own wife to be spoke of that way, Misther Dick, as proud as you ride your horse therehumph?"

Andy, in great indignation, pursued his way towards his mother's cabin to ask her blessing upon his marria; " On his presenting himself there, both the old woman and Oonah were in great delight at witnessing his safe return; Oonah particularly, for she, feeling that it was for ler sake Andy placed himself in danger, had been in a state of great anxiety for the result of the adventure, and, on seeing him, absolutely threw herself into his arms, and embraced him tenderty, impressing many a hearty kiss upon his lips, between whiles that she vowed she would never forget his generosity and courage, and ending with saying there was nothing she would not do for

Now Andy was flesh and blood like other people, and manner alone had hitherto made him keep to him self; but now, when he saw her eyes beam grati tude, and her cheek flush, after her strong demon stration of regard, and heard her last words, so very like a hint to a shy man, it must be owned a sudden pang shot through poor Andy's heart, and he sickened at the thought of being married, which placed the tempting prize before him hopelessly beyond his reach.

He looked so blank, and seemed so unable to return Oonah's fond greeting, that she felt the pique which every pretty woman experiences who fancies her favors disre garded, and thought Andy the stupidest lout she ever came across. Turning up her hair, which had fallen dov I in the excess of her friendship, she walked out of the ccttage, and, biting her disdainful lip, fairly cried for spite.

In the meantime, Andy popped down on his knees be fore the widow, and said, "Give me your blessing, mother!"

"For what, you omadhawn?" said his mother, flercely;

for her woman's nature took part with Oonah s feelings, which she quite comprehended, and she was vexed with what she thought Andy's disgusting insensibility. "For what should I give you my blessing?" "Bekase I'm marri'd, ma'am."

"What!" exclaimed the mother. "It's not marri'd again you are? You're jokin' sure."

"Faix, it's no joke," said Andy, sadly, "I'm marri'd sure enough; so give us your blessin', anyhow," cried he, still kneeling.

"And who did you dar' for to marry, sir, if I make so bowld to ax, without my lave or license?"

"There was no time for axin', mother-'twas done in a hurry, and I can't help it, so give us your blessing at

"Tell me who is she, before I give you my blessin'?" "Shan More's sister, ma'am."

"What!" exclaimed the widow, staggering back some paces.-" Sham More's sisther, did you say-Bridget rhua, * is it?"

" Yis, ma'am." "Oh, wirrasthrui-plillelewi-millia murther!" shouted the mother, tearing her cap off her head,-"Oh blessed Vargin, holy St. Dominick, Pether an' Paul the 'possel, what'll I do?-Oh, patther an' ave-you dirty bosthoonblessed angels and holy marthyrs!-kneelin' there in the middle o' the flure as if nothing happened-look down on me this day, a poor vartnous dissolute woman !-Oh, you disgrace to me and all belonging to you,—and is it the impidence to ask my blessin' you have, when it's a whippin' at the cart's tail you ought to get, you shameless scapegrace?"

She then went wringing her hands, and throwing them upwards in appeals to Heaven, while Andy still kept kneeling in the middle of the cabin, lost in wonder.

The widow ran to the door and called Oonah in. "Who do you think that blackguard is marri'd to?" said the widow. "Married!" exclaimed Oonah, growing pale.

"Ay, marri'd, and who to, do you think?-Why to Bridget rhua."

Oonah screamed and clasped her hands. Andy got up at last, and asked what they were making such a rout about; he wasn't the first man who married without asking his mother's leave; and wanted to know what they had to "say agen it." "Oh, you barefaced scandal o' the world!" cried the widow, "to ax sitch a question-to marry a thrampin' sthreel like that -a great red-headed jack-"

"She can't help her hair," said Andy.

"I wish I could cut it off, and her head along with it, the sthrap! Oh, blessed Vargin! to have my daughter-in-

"What?" said Andy, getting rather alarmed. "That all the country knows is-"

"What?" cried Andy.

"Not a fair nor a market-town doesn't know her as well as-Oh, wirral wirra!"

"Why, you don't mane to say anything agen her charakter, do you?" said Andy. "Charakter, indeed!" said his mother, with a sneer.

"By this an' that," said Andy, "if she was the child unborn, she couldn't make a greater hullaballoo about her charakter than she did the mornin' afther." "Afther what?" said his mother.

"Afther I was tuk away up to the hill beyant, an' found her there, and -- but I b'lieve I didn't tell you how it happened."

"No," said Oonah, coming forward, deadly pale, and listening anxiously, with a look of deep pity in her soft

Andy then related his adventure as the reader already knows it; and when it was ended Oonah burst into tears, and in passionate exclamations blamed herself for all that had happened, saying it was in the endeavor to save her that Andy had lost himself.

"Oh, Oonah! Oonah!" said Andy, with more meaning in his voice than the girl had ever heard before, "it isn't the loss of myself I mind, but I've lost you too. Oh. if you had ever given me a tendher word or look before this day, 'twould never have happened, and that desaiver in the hills never could have dehidhered me. And tell me, lanna machree, is my suspicions right in what I hear-tell me the worst at oncet-is she non compositio

"Oh, I never heerd her called by that name before." sobbed Oonah, "but she has a great many others just as

"Ow! ow! ow!" exclaimed Andy. "Now I know what Misther Dick laughed at; well, death before dishon or -- I'D go 'list for a sojer, and never live with her!"

CHAPTER XLIV.

Ir has been necessary in an earlier chapter to notice the strange freak a madness will sometimes play. It was then the object to know how strong affections of the mind will recall an erring judgment to its true balance; but the action of the counierpoise growing weaker by time, the dis ease returns, and reason again kicks the beam. Such was the old dowager's case: the death of her son recalled her to herself; but a few days produced relapse, and she was as foolish as ever. Nevertheless, as Polonius remarks of Hamlet,

"There is method in his madness!"

so in the dowager's case there was method—not of a sane intention, as the old courtier implies of the Danish prince. but of insane birth-begot of a chivalrous feeling on an enfeebled mind.

To make this clearly understood it is necessary to call attention to one other peculiarity of madness-that while all sorts of nonsense on some subjects, it never impairs their powers of observation on those which chance to come within the reach of the undiseased portion of the mind; and moreover they are quite as capable of arriving at just conclusions upon what they so see and hear, as the most reasonable person, and, perhaps, in proportion as the reasoning power is limited within a smaller compass, so the capability of observation becomes stronger by being concentrated.

· * Rad-hatrod Bridget

Such was the case with the old dowager who, while Furlong was "doing devotion" to Augusta, and appeared the pink of faithful swains, saw very clearly that Furlong did not like it a bit, and would gladly be off his bargain. Yea, while the people in their sober senses on the same plane with the parties were taken in, the old lunatic, even from the toppling height of her own mad chimney-pot, could look down and see that Furlong would not marry Augusta, if he could help it.

It was even so. Furlong had acted under the influence of terror when poor Augusta, shoved into his bedroom through the devilment of that rascally imp, Ratty, and found there, through the evil destiny of Andy, was flung into his arms by her enraged father, and accepted as his wife. The immediate hurry of the election had delayed the marriage-the duel and its consequences further interrupted "the happy event"-and O'Grady's death caused a further postponement. It was delicacely hinted to Furlong, that when matters had gone so far as to the wedding-dresses being ready, that the sooner the contracting parties under such circumstances were married, the better. But Furlong with that affectation of propricty which belongs to his time-serving tribe, pleaded the " regard to appearance"-" so soon after the ever-to-be-deplored event,"-and other such specious excuses, which were but covers to his own rascality, and used but to postpone the "wedding day." The truth was, the moment Furlong had no longer the terrors of O'Grady's pistol before his eyes, he had resolved never to take so bad a match as that with Augusta appeared to be-indeed was, as ar as regarded money; though Furlong should only have been too glad to be permitted to mix his plebian blood with the daughter of a man of high family, whose crippled circumstances and consequent truckling conduct had reduced him to the wretched necessity of making such a cur as Furlong the inmate of his house. But so it was.

The family began at last to suspect the real state of the case, and all were surprised except the old dowager; she had expected what was coming, and had prepared herself for it. All her pistol practice was with a view to call Furlong to the "last arbitrament" for this slight ground, sir." to her house. Gusty was too young, she considered, for the duty; therefore she, in her fantastic way of looking at the matter, looked upon herself as the head of the family, and, as such, determined to resent the affront put upon it. But of her real design the family at Neck-or-Nothing Hall had not the remotest notion. Of course, an old lady going about with a pistol, powder-tlask, and bullets, and practising on the trunks of the trees in the park, could not pass without observation, and surmises there were on the subject; then her occasional exclamation of "Tremble, villain!" would escape her; and sometimes in the family circle, after sitting for a while in a state of abstraction, she would lift her attenuated hand armed with a knitting-needle or a ball of worsted, and assuming the action of poising a pistol, execute a smart click with her tongue, and say, "I hit him that time." These exclamations, indicative of vengeance, were supposed at length by the family to apply to Edward O'Connor, but excited pity rather than alarm. When, however, one morning, the dowager was nowhere to be found, and Ratty and the pistols had also disappeared, an inquiry was instituted as to the old lady's whereabouts, and Mount Eskar was one of the first places where she was sought, but without success; and all other inquiries were equally unavailing. The old lady had contrived, with that cunning peculiar to insane people, to get away from the house at an early hour in the morning, unknown to all except Ratty, to [whom she confided her intention, and managed to get her out of the domain unobserved, and thence toget her they proceeded to Dublin in a post-chaise.

It was the day after as secret expedition was un- locked; take your weapon, sir, quick!-what!-a cowdertaken that Mr. Furlong was sitting in his private | ard!". spartment at the Castle, doing "the state some service" by reading the morning papers, which heavy official duty he relieved occasionally by turning to some scented notes which lay near a morocco writingcase, whence they had been drawn by the lisping dandy to flatter his vanity. He had been carrying ou a correspondence with an anonymous fair one, in whose heart, if her words might be believed, Furlong had made desperate havoc. It happened, however, that these notes were all fictitious, being the work of Tom Loftus, who enjoyed playing on a puppy as much as playing on the organ; and he had the satisfaction of seeing Furlong going through his paces in certain squares he had appointed, wearing a Lower of Tom's choice and going through other antica which Tom had demanded under the signature of "Phillis," written in a delicate hand on pink satin notepaper with a lace border; one of the last notes suggested the possibility of a visit from the lady, and after asrurances of "secrecy and honor" had been returned by Furlong, he was anxiously expecting "what would become of it;" and filled with pleasing reflections of what "a devil of a fellow" he was among the ladies, he occasionally paced the room before a handsome dressingglass (with which his apartment was always furnished), and run his fingers through his curls with a complacent smile. While thus occupied, and in such a frame of mind the hall messenger entered the apartment, and said a lady wished to see him.

"A lady!" exclaimed Furlong, in delighted surprise.

"She won't give her name, sir, but-" "Show her up! show her up!" exclaimed the Lothario, eagerly. All anxiety, he awaited the appearance of his donna; and quite a donna she seemed, as a commanding figure, dressed in black, and enveloped in a rich veil of the name, glided into the room. "How vewy Spanish!" exclaimed Furlong, as he advanced to meet his incognita, who, as soon as she entered. locked the door, and withdrew the key.

"Quite pwactised in such secwet affairs," said Furlong elity. "Fai' lady, allow me to touch you' fai' hand, and lead you to a seat." The mysterious stranger made no answer; but lifting her long veil, turned round on the lisping dandy, who staggered back when the dowager O'Grady appeared before him, drawn up to her full height, and anything but an intent to murder, &c., &c. agreeable expression in her eye. She stalked up towards "Some mad old rebel, I suppose," said Major Sir. "Do I they got into these labyrinths of nastiness, Tom thought he him, something in the style of a spectre in a romance, you remember '96, ma'am?" said the major.

which she was not very unlike; and as she advanced, he retreated, until he got the table between him and this I have the honour to address, if I don't mistake." most unwelcome apparition.

"I am come," said the dowager, with an ominous tone

"Vewy happy of the hono', I am sure, Mistwess O'Gwady," faltered Furlong.

"The avenger has come." Furlong opened his eyes. "I have come to wash the stain!" said she, tapping her fingers in a theatrical manner on the table, and, as it happened, she pointed to a large blotch of ink on the tablecover. Furlong opened his eyes wider than ever, and thought this the queerest bit of madness he ever heard of; however, thinking it best to humor her, he answered, "Yes, it was a little awkwa'ness of mine—I upset the inkstand the othe' day."

"Do you mock me, sir?" said she, with increasing bit- roast?"

terness. "La, no! Mistwess O'Gwady."

"I have come, I say, to wash out in your blood the stain you have dared to put on the name of O'Grady." Furlong gasped with mingled amazement and fear.

"Tremble, villlau!" she said: and she pointed toward him her long attenuated finger with portentous solemnity. "I weally am quite at a loss, Mistwess O'Gwady, to she had. compwehend-

Before he could finish his sentence, the downger had drawn from the depths of her side-pockets a brace of pistols, and presenting them to Furlong, said, "Be at a loss no longer, except the loss of life which may ensue; take your choice of weapons, sir."

from head to foot.

"You won't choose, then?" said the downger. "Well, with as courteous a manner as if she were making him a birthday present. Furlong stared down upon it with a look of horror.

"Now we must toss for choice of ground," said the dowager. "I have no money about me, for I paid my last hulf-crown to the post-boy, but this will do as well for a toss as anything else;" and she laid her hands on the dressing-glass as she spoke. "Now the call shall be 'safe,' or 'smash;' whoever calls 'safe,' if the glass comes down unbroken, has the choice, and vice versa. I call first-'emash,'" said the dowager, as she flung up the dressing-glass, which fell in shivers on the floor. "I have won," said she; "oblige me, sir, by standing in that far corner. I have the light in my back-and you will have something else in yours before long; take your

Furlong, finding himself thus cooped up with a mad woman, in an agony of terror suddenly bethought himself of instances he had heard of escape, under similar circumstances, by coinciding to a certain extent with the views of the insane people, and suggested to the downger that he hoped she would not insist on a duel without their having a "friend" present. "I beg your pardon, sir," said the old lady; "I quite forgot that form, in the excitement of the moment, though I have not overlooked the necessity altogether, and have come provided with one."

"Allow me to wing for him," said Furlong, rushing to the bell.

"Stop!" exclaimed the dowager, levelling her pistol at the bell-pull; "touch it, and you are a dead man!" Furlong stood riveted to the spot where his rush had been arrested. "No interruption, sir, till this little affair is settled. Here is my friend, she added, putting her hand into her pocket and pulling out the wooden cuckoo of her clock. "My little bird, sir, will see fair between us;" and she perched the painted wooden thing, with a bit of feather grotesquely sticking up out of its nether end, on the morocco letter-case. "Oh, Lord!" said Furlong. "He's a gentleman of the nicest honor, sir!" said the dowager, pacing back to the window. Furlong took advantage of the opportunity of her back being turned, and rushed at the bell, which he pulled with great fury. The dowager wheeled round with haste. "So you have rung," said she, "but it shall not avail you-the door is

"Weally, Mistwess O'Gwady, I cannot think of deadly arbitrament with a lady."

"Less would you like it with a man, paltroon," said she, with an exaggerated expression of contempt in ber manner. "However," she added, " if you are a coward, you shall have a coward's punishment," She went to a corner where stood a great variety of handsome canes, and laying hold of one, began soundly to thrash Furlong, who feared to make any resistance or attempt to disarm her of the cane, for the pistol was yet in her other hand.

The bell was answered by the servant, who, on finding the door locked, and hearing the row inside, began to knock and inquire loudly what was the matter. The question was more loudly answered by Furlong, who roared out, "Bweak the door! bweak the door!" interlarding his directions with cries of "murder!"

The door at length was forced, Furlong rescued, and the old lady separated from him. She became perfectly calm the moment other persons appeared, and was replacing the pistols in her pocket, when Furlong requested the "dweadful weapons" might be seized. The old lady gave up the pistols very quietly, but laid hold of her bird and put it back into her pocket.

"This is a dweadful violation!" said Furlong, "and my life is not eafe unless she is bound ove' to keep the peace. "Pooh! pooh!" said one of the gentlemen from the adjacent office, who came to the scene on hearing the uproar, "binding over an old lady to keep the peace-non-

Bense!" "I insist upon it," said Furlong, with that stubbornness for which fools are so remarkable. "Oh-very well!" said the sensible gentleman, who left the room. A party, pursuant to Furlong's determination, proceeded to the head police-office close by the Castle, and a large mob gathered as they went down Cork-hill, and followed them to Exchange-court, where they crowded before them in front of the office. so that it was with difficulty the principals could make their way through the dense mass. At length, however, they entered the office; and when

Major Sir heard any gentleman attached to the Government wanted his assistance, of course he put any other case aside, and had the accuser called up before him. Furlong made his charge of assault and battery, with

"Indeed I do, sir-and I remember you too: Major Su

"Yes, ma'am. What then?"

"I remember well in '98 when you were searching for rebels, you thought a man was concealed in a dairy-yard in the neighborhood of my mother's house, Major, in Stephen's Green; and you thought he was hid in a hayrick, and ordered your sergeant to ask for the loan of a spit from my mother's kitchen to probe the hay stack."

"Oh! then, madam, your mother was loyal, I suppose."

"Most loyal, sir."

"Give the lady a chair," said the major. "Thank you, I don't want it-but, Major, when you asked for the spit, my mother thought you were going to practice one of your delightfully ingenious bits of punishment, and asked the sergeant who il was you were going to

The major grew livid on the bench where he sat, at this awkward reminiscence of one of his friends, and a dead silence reigned through the crowded office. He recovered himself, however, and addressed Mrs. O'Grady in a mumbling manner, telling her she must give security to keep the peace, herself-and find friends as sureties. On asking her had she any friends to appear for her, she declared

"A gentleman of the nicest honer, sir," said the dowager, pulling her cuckoo from her pocket, and holding it up in view of the whole office.

A shout of laughter of course followed. The affair became at once understood in its true light; a mad old lady, a paltry coward-&c., &c. Those who know the excita-"Gwacious Heaven!" exclaimed Furlong, trembling bility and fun of an Irish mob will not wonder that, when the story got circulated from the office to the crowd without, which it did with lightning rapidity, the there's one for you;" and she laid a pistol before him old lady, on being placed in a hackney-coach which was sent for, was hailed with a chorus of "Cuckool" by the multitude, one half of which ran after the coach as long as they could keep pace with it, shouting forth the spring-time call, and the other half followed Furlong to the Castle, with hisses and other more articulate demonstrations of their contempt.

CHAPTER LXV.

THE fat and fair widow Flanagan had, at length, given up shilly-shallying, and yielding to the fervent entreaties of Tom Durfy, had consented to name the happy day. She would have some little ways of her own about it, however, and instead of being married in the country, insisted on the nuptial knot being tied in Dublin. Thither the widow repaired with her swain to complete the stipulated time of residence within some metropolitan parish before the wedding could take place. In the meanwhile they enjoyed all the gaiety the capital presented, the time glided swiftly by, and Tom was within a day of being made a happy man, when, as he was hastening to the lodgings of the fair widow, who was waiting with her bornet and shaw! on to be escorted to the botanical gardens of Glasnevia, he was accosted by an odd-looking person of somewhat sinister aspect.

"I believe I have the honor of addressing Mister Durfy wir?" Tom answered in the affirmative. "Thomas Durfy Esquire, I thank, sir?" " Yes."

"This is for you, sir," he said, handing Tom a piece of dirty printed paper, and at the same time laying his hand on Tom's shoulder and executing a smirking sort of grin, which he meant to be the pattern of politeness, added, "You'll excuse me, sir, but I arrest you under a warrant from the High Sheriff of the city of Dublin; always sorry, sir, for a gintleman in defliculties, but it's my duty."

"You're a bailiff, then?" said Tom.

"Sir," said the bum,

"' Honor and shame from no condition rise; Act well your part—there all the honor lies." "

"I meant no offense," said Tom. "I only meant-" "I understand, sir-I understand. These little defficulties startles gintlemen first-you've not been used to arrest, I see, sir?" "Never in my life did such a thing happen before," said Tom. "I live generally, thank God, where a bailtff daren't show his face."

"Ah sir, said the bailiff with a grin, "them rustic habita betrays the children o' nature often when they come to town; but we are so fisticated here in the metropolis, that we lay our hands on strangers aisy. But you'd better not stand in the streets, sir, or people will understand it's an arrest, sir; and I suppose you wouldn't like the exposure. I can simperise in a gintleman's feelings, sir. If you walk alsy on, sir, and don't attempt to escape or rescue, I'll keep a gentlemat like distance."

Tom walked on in great perplexity for a few steps, not knowing what to do. The hour of his rendezvous had struck; he knew how impatient of neglect the widow always was; he at one moment thought of asking the bailiff to allow him to proceed to her lodgings at once, there boldly to avow what had taken place and ask her to discharge the debt; but this his pride would not allow him tordo. As he came to the corner of a street, he got a tap on the elbow from the bailiff, who with a jerking motion of his thumb and a wink, said in a confldential tone to Tom, "Down this street, sir-that's the way to the pres'n (prison)." "Prison!" exclaimed Tom, halting involuntarily at the word. "Shove on, sir-shove on!" hastily repeated the sheriff's officer, urging his orders by a nudge or two on Tom's elbow. "Don't shove me, sir!" said Tom, rather angrily, " or by G---" "Alsy, sir-aisy!" said the bailiff; "though I feel for the defliculties of a gintleman, the caption must be made, sir. If you don't like the pris'n, I have a nice little room o' my own, sir, where you can wait, for a small considera tion, until you get bail."

"I'll go there, then," said Tom. "Go through as private streets as you can."

"Give me half-a-guinea for my trouble, sir, and I'll ambulate you through lanes every fut o' the way."

"Very well," said Tom.

They now struck into a shabby street, and thence wended through stable lanes, filthy alleys, up greasy broken steps, through one close, and down steps in another-threaded dark passages whose debouchures were blocked up with posts to prevent vehicular conveyance, the accumulated dirt of years sensible to the tread from its lumpy unevenness, and the stagnant air rife with pestilence. Tom felt increasing disgust at every step he proceeded, but anything to him appeared better than being seen in the public streets in such company; for, until saw in the looks of every passer-by, as plainly told as if the words were spoken, "There goes a fellow under the care of the bailiff." In these by-ways, he had not any objection to speak to his companion, and for the first time asked him what he was arrested for.

"At the suit of Mr. M'Kail, sir." "Oh! the tailor?" said Tom.

"Yes, sir," said the bailiff. "And if you would not consider it trifling with the feelings of a gintleman in defliculties, I would make the playful observation, sir, that it's quite in character to be arrested at the suit of a tailor. Hel hel hel"

"You're a wag I see," said Tom.

"Oh no, sir, only a poetic turn: a small affection I have certainly for Judy Mot, but my rale passion is the muses. We are not far now, sir, from my little bower of reposewhich is the name I give my humble abode-small, but anug, sir. You'll see another gintleman there, sir, before you. He is waitin' for bail these three or four days, sir -can't pay as he ought for the 'commodation, but he's a friend o' mine, I may almost say, sir-a litherary gintleman-them litherary gentlemen is always in defliculties mostly. I suppose you're a litherary gintleman, sirthough you're rather ginteely dhressed for one?"

"No," said Tom, "I am not." "I thought you wor, sir, by being acquainted with this other gintleman."

"An acquaintance of mine!" said Tom, with sur-

D) SO. ' Yes, air. In short it was through him I found out where you wor, sir. I have had the wret agen you for come time, but couldn't make you off, till my friend says a must carry a note from him to you."

"Where is the note?" inquired Tom. "Not ready yet, sir. It's po'thry he's writin-something 'pithy' he said, and 'lame' too. I dunna how a thing could be pithy and lame together, but them potes has hard words at command,"

"Then you came away without the note?"

"Yis, sir. As soon as I found out where you wor stopping I ran off directly on Mr. M'Kail's little business. You'll excuse the liberty, sir; but we must all mind our professions; though, indeed, sir, if you b'lieve me, I'd rather nab a rhyme than a gintleman any day; and if I could get on the press I'd quit the shoulder-tapping profession."

Tom cast an eye of wonder on the bailiff, which the latter comprehended at once; for with habitual himbleness he could nab a man's thoughts as fast as his person.

"I know what you're thinkin', sir-could one of my profession pursue the muses? Don't think, sir, I mane I could write the 'laders' or the pollitik'l articles, but the criminal cases, sir—the robberies and offinces—with the watchhouse cases-together with a little po'thry now and then. think I could be useful, sir, and do better than some of the chaps that pick up their ha'pence that way. But here's my place, sir-my little bower of repose."

He knocked at the door of a small tumble-down house in a fifthy lane, the one window it presented in front being barred with iron. Some bolts were drawn inside, and though the man who opened the door was forbidding in his aspect, he did not refuse to let Tom in. The portal was hastily closed and holted after they had entered. The smell of the house was pestilential—the entry dead dark.

"Give me your hand, sir," said the bailiff, leading Tom forward. They ascended some creaking stairs, and the bailtf, fumbling for some time with a key at a door, unlocked it and shoved it open, and then led in his captive. Tom saw a shabby-genteel sort of person, whose back was towards him, directing a letter.

"Ah, Goggins!" said the writer, "you're come back in the nick of time. I have finished now, and you may take the letter to Mister Durfy." "You may give it to him yourself sir," replied Goggins,

"for here he is."

"Indeed!" said the writer, turning round. "What!" exclaimed Tom Durfy, in surprise; "James

"Even so," said James, with a sentimental air: "The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

Literature is a bad trade, my dear Tom!—'tis an ungrateful world—men of the highest aspirations may lie in goal for all the world cares; not that you come within the pale and see a friend in trouble. You deserve, my dear Tom, that you should have been uppermost in my thoughts; for here is a note I have just written to you, enclosing a copy of verses to you on your marriage—in short, it is an epithalamium."

"That's what I told you, eir," said Goggins to Tom. I'om Durfy, stamping round the little room.

James Reddy stared in wonder, and Goggins roared, laughing.

"A pietty compliment you've paid me, Mister Reddy, this fine morning," said Tom; "you tell a bailiff where I live, that you may send your infernal verses to me, and you get me arrested.

"Oh, murder!" exclaimed James. "I'm very sorry, my dear Tom; but, at the same time, 'tis a capital incident! How it would work up in a farce!"

"How funny it is!" said Tom in a rage, eyeing James as if he could have eaten him. "Bad luck to all poetry and paetasters! By the 'tarnal war, I wish every poet, from Homer down, was put into a mortar and pounded to death!"

James poured forth expressions of sorrow for the mischance; and extremely ludicrous it was to see one man making applogies for trying to pay his friend a compliment: his friend swearing at him for his civility, and the bailiff grinning at them both.

In this triangular dilemma we will leave them for the present.

CHAPTER XLVL

EDWARD O'CONNOR, on hearing from Gustavus of the | could." old dowager's disappearance from Neck-or-Nothing Hall, joined in the eager inquiries which were made about her, and his being directed with more method and judgment than those of others, their result was more satisfactory. He soon "took up the trail," to use an Indian phrase, and he and Gusty were not many hours in posting after the old lady. They arrived in town early in the morning, and lost no time in casting about for information.

where the old dowager had obtained her carriage in the feed; but as he could not wait to do it himself, he called sire the glory of success, without power to measure the country; but there no trace was to be had. Next, the Andy, to give him directions about it, and set off with strength that can achieve it; like some poor fly, which principal hotels were referred to, but as yet without Edward to the relief of Tom Durly. success; when, as they turned into one of the leading streets in continuance of their search, their attention ! was attracted by a crowd swaying to and fro in that . The name of a celebrated sweep in Ireland, whose comprehend, but too strong for its limited power to pass. poculiar manner which plicates there is a fight inside name is applied to the whole.

of it. Great excitement prevailed on the verge of the crowd, where exclamations escaped from those who could get a peep at the fight.

"The little chap has great heart!" cried one. "But the sweep is the biggest," said another.

"Well done, Horish!" cried a blackguard, who enjoy ed the triumph of his fellow. "Bravo! little fellow," rejoined a genteel person, who rejoiced in some successful hit of the other combatants There is an inherent love in men to see a fight, which Edward O'Connor shared with inferior men; and if he had not peeped into the ring, most assuredly Gusty would. What was their astonishment, when they got a glimpse of the pugilists, to perceive Ratty was one of them-his antagonist being a sweep, taller by a head, and no bad hand at the "noble science."

Edward's first impulse was to separate them, but Gusty requested he would not, saying that he saw by Ratty's eye he was able to "lick the fellow." Ratty certainly showed great fight; what the sweep had in superior size was equalized by the superior "game" of the gentleman-boy to whom the indomitable courage of a high-blooded race had descended, and who would sooner have died than yield. Besides, Ratty was not deficient in the use of his "bunch of fives," hit hard for his size, and was very agile: the sweep sometimes made a rush, grappled, and got a fall; but he never went in without getting something from Ratty to "remember him," and was not always uppermost. At last, both were so far punished and the combat not being likely to be speedily ended (for the sweep was no craven), that the bystanders interfered, declaring that "they ought to be separated," and they

While the crowd was dispersing, Edward called a coach; and before Ratty could comprehend how the affair was managed, he was shoved into it and driven from the scene of action. Ratty had a confused sense of hearing loud shouts-of being lifted somewhere-of diretions given -the rattle of iron steps clinking sharply—two or three fierce bangs of a door that wouldn't shut, and then an awful shaking, which roused him up from the corner of the vehicle into which he had fallen in the first moment of exhaustion. Ratty "shook his feathers," dragged his hair from out of his eyes, which were getting very black indeed, and applied his handkerchief to his nose, which was much in need of that delicate attention; and when the sense of perfect vision was restored to him, which was not for some time (all the colors of the rainbow dancing before Ratty's eyes for many seconds after the fight), what was his surprise to see Edward O'Connor and Gusty sitting on the opposite scatt

It was some time before Ratty could comprehend the present situation; but as soon as he was made sensible of it, and could answer, the first questions asked of him were about his grandmother. Ratty fortunately rememberd the name of the hotel where she put up, though he had left it as soon as the old lady proceeded to the Castle-had lost his way—and got engaged in a quarrel with a sweep in the meantime.

The coach was ordered to drive to the hotel named; and how the fight occurred was the next question.

"The sweep was passing by, and I called him "snowball." said Ratty; "and the blackguard returned an impudent answer, and I hit him."

"You had no right to call him 'snow-ball," " said Edward.

"I always called the sweeps 'snow-ball' down at the Hall," said Ratty, "and they never answered." "When you are on your own territory you may say what you please to your dependents, Ratty, and they dare not answer; or to use a vulgar saying, 'A cock may crow on his own dunghill." " "I'm no dunghill cock!" said Ratty, flercely.

"Indeed, you're not," said Edward, laying his hand kindly on the boy's shoulder; "you have plenty of courage." "I'd have licked him," said Ratty, "if they'd have let me have two or three rounds more.'

"My dear boy, other things are needful in this world besides courage. Prudence, temper, and forbearance are required; and this may be a lesson to you, to remember, that, when you get abroad in the world, you are very little cared about, however great your conseof the worthless ones; this is good natured of you to come | quence may be at home; and I am sure you cannot be proud about your having got into a quarrel with a sweep."

Ratty made no answer-his blood began to cool-he became every moment more sensible that he had received heavy blows. His eyes became more swollen, he snuffled more in his speech, and his blackened condition altogether, from gutter, soot, and thrashing, con-"May the divil burn you and your epithalamium!" said | vinced him a fight with a sweep was not an enviable achievement.

The coach drew up at the hotel. Edward left Gusty to see about, the dowager, and made an appointment for Gusty to meet him at their own lodgings in an hour: while he in the interim should call on Dick Dawson, who was in town on his way to London.

Edward shook hands with Ratty and bade him kindly good-bye. "You're a stout fellow, Ratty," said he, "but remember this old saying, 'quarrelsome dogs get dirty couts." "

Edward now proceeded to Dick's lodgings, and found him engaged in reading a note from Tom Durfy, dated from the "Bower of Repose," and requesting Dick's aid in his present difficulty.

"Here's a pret:y kettle of fish," said Dick: "Tom Durfy, who is engaged to dine with me to-day to take leave of his bachelor life, as he is going to be married tomorrow, is arrested, and now in quod, and wants me to bail him."

Edward; "is it much?" and my expenses there-not but what I'd help Tom if I manage to get him out," said Edward; "perhaps I can fort is, even in disgrace I can write, and they shall get a help you in the affair."

ing his hand warmly. Edward escaped from hearing any praise of himself by Tom was no great conjuror; but a that moment, like proposing they should repair at once to the sponging. Audrey, "he thanked the gods he was not poetical." If house, and see how matters stood. Dick lamented he there be any one thing more than another to make an should be called away at such a moment, for he was just "every-day man" content with his average lot, it is the One of the first places Edward inquired at was the inn going to get his wine ready for the party-particularly exhibition of ambitious inferiority, striving for distinction where the postchaise generally drove to from the house some champague, which he was desirous of seeing well it can never attain; just given sufficient perception to de-

the Squire, on finding him still more closely linked by his marriage with the desperate party whose influence over Andy was to be dreaded, took advantage of Andy's disgust against the woman who had entrapped him, and offered to take him off to London instead of enlisting; and as Andy believed he would be there sufficiently out of the way of the false Bridget, he came off at once to Dublin with Dick, who was the pioneer of the party to London.

Dick gave Andy the necessary directions for icing the champagne, which he set apart and pointed out most particularly to our hero, lest he should make a mistake and perchance ice the port instead.

After Edward and Dick had gone, Andy commenced operations according to orders. He brought a large tub up-stairs containing rough ice, which excited Andy's won der, for he never had known till now that ice was preserved for and applied to such a use, for an ice-house did not happen to be attached to any establishment in which he had served.

"Well, this is the quarest thing I ever heerd of," said Andy. "Musha! what outlandish inventions the quolity has among them! They're not content with wine, but they must have ice along with it-and in a tub, too! just like pigs!-throth, it's a dirty thrick, I think. Well, here goes!" said he, and Andy opened a bottle of champagne, and poured it into the tub with the ice. How it fizzes!" said Andy, "Faix, its almost as lively as the soda-wather that bothered me so long ago. Well, I know more about things now; sure its wondherful how a man improves with practicel"-and another bottle of champagne was emptied into the tub as he spoke. Thus, with several other complacent comments upon his own proficiency, Andy poured half-a-dozen of champagne into the tub of ice, and remarked, when he had fluished his work, that he thought it would be "mighty cowid on their s'omache,"

Dick and Edward all this time were on their way to the relief of Tom Durfy, who, though he had cooled down from the boiling pitch to which the m. sadventure of the morning had raised him, was still simmering, with his elbows planted on the rickety tab'e in Mr Groggins' "bower," and his chin resting on his clenched hands. It was the very state of mind in which Tom was most dangerous.

At the other side of the table sat James Roley, intently employed in writing; his pursed month and knitted brows bespoke a laboring state of thought, and the various crossings, interlinings, and blotti it gave additional evidence of the same; while now and then a rush at a line which was knocked off in a hurty, with slashing dashes of the pen, and flerce after-crossings of t's, and determined dottings of i's, declared some thought suddenly seized, and executed with bitter triumph.

"You seem very happy in yourself in what you are writing," said Tom. "What is it? Is it another epithalamium?"

"It is a caustic article against the success'ul men of the day," said Reddy! "they have no merit, sir -- none "Tis nothing but luck has placed them where they are, and they ought to be exposed." He then threw down hie pen as he spoke, and, after a silence of some minutes, suddenly put this question to Tom:

"What do you think of the world?"

"Faith, I think it so pleasant a place," said Tom "that I'm confoundedly vexed at being kept out of it by being locked up here; and that cursed bailiff is so provekingly free-and-easy-coming in here every ten minutes, and making himself at home."

"Why, as for that matter, it is his home, you must remember,"

"But while a gentleman is here for a period," said Tom, "this room ought to be considered his, and that fellow has no business here; and then he bows and scrapes, and talking about the feelings of a gentleman, and all that—'tis enough to make a dog beat his father. Curse him! I'd like to choke him." "Oh! that's merely his manner," said James.

"Want of manners, you mean," said Tom. " Hang me, if he comes up to me with his rascally familiarity again.

but I'll kick him down stairs."

"My dear fellow, you are excited," said Reddy; "don't let these sublunary trifles rulle your temper; you see how I bear it. And to recall you to yourself, I will remind you of the question we started from, 'What do you think of the world?' There's a general question-a broad question, upon which ore may talk with temper and soar above the petty grievances of life in the grand considertion of so ample a subject. You see me here, a prisoner like yourself; but I can talk of the world. Come, be a calm philosopher, like me! Answer, what do you think of the world?

"I've told you already," said Tom; "it's a capita.

place, only for the bailiffs. "I can't agree with you," said James. "I think it one vast pool of stagnant wretchedness, where the malaria of injustice holds her scales suspended, to poison rising talent by giving an undue weight to existing prejudices."

To this lucid and good-tempered piece of philosophy. Tom could only answer, "You know I am no poet, and I cannot argue with you; but, 'pon my soul, I have known. and do know, some uncommon good fellows in the World,"

"You're wrong, you're wrong, my unsuspecting friend. Tis a bad world, and no place for susceptible minds. Jealonsy pursues talent like its shadow; superiority alone wins for you the hatred of inferior men. For instance. why am I here? The editor of my paper will not allow "The shortest way is to pay the money at once," said my articles always to appear: prevents their insertion lest the effect they would make would cause inquiry, and tend "That I don't know; but I have not a great deal about to my distinction; and the consequence is, that the paper me, and what I have I want for my journey to Loudon I came a uphold in Dublin is deprived of my articles, and / don't get paid; while I see inferior men, without as ing for it loaded with favor; they are abroad in "He must not be allowed to remain there, however we "muence, and / in captivity and poverty. But one com-

| slashing " "You're always a good fellow, Ned," said Dick, shak- Thus spoke the calm philosopher, who gave Tom a lec ture on patience.

beats its head against a pane of glass, seeing the sunshine Andy was once more in service in the Egan family; for beyond, but incapable of perceiving the subtle medium which intervenes too delicate for its limited sense to But though Tom falt estisfaction at that moment he had too good feeding to wound the self-love of the vain creature before him; so, instead of speaking what he thought, viz., "What business have you to attempt literature, you conceited fool?" he tried to wean him civilly from his folly by saying, "Then come back to the country, James; if you find jealous rivals here, you know you were always admired there."

"No, sir," said James; "even there my merit was unacknowleded." "No! no!" said Tom.

"Well, underrated, at least. Even there, that Edward O'Connor, somehow or other, I never could tell why-I never raw his great talents-but somehow or other, people got it into their heads that he was clever." "I tell you what it is," said Tom, earnestly, "Ned-of-the-Hill has got into a better place than people's heads -he has got into their hearts!"

"There it is!" exclaimed James, indignantly. "You have caught up the cuckoo-cry-the heart! Why, sir, what merit is there in writing about feelings which any common laborer can comprehend? There's no poetry in that; true poetry lies in a higher sphere, where you have difficulty in following the flight of the poet, and possibly may not be fortunate enough to understand him-that's poetry, sir." "I told you I am no poet," said Tom; "but all I know is, I have felt my heart warm to some of Edward's songs, and, by jingo, I have seen the women's eyes glisten, and their cheeks flush or grow pale, as they have heard them

-and that's poetry enough for me." "Well, let Mister O'Connor enjoy his popularity, sir, if popularity it may be called, in a small country circle-let him enjoy it-I don't envy him his, though I think he was rather jealous about mine."

"Ned jealous!" exclaimed Tom, in surprise "Yes, jealous; I never heard him say a kind word of has most unkind feelings toward me."

"I tell you what it is," said Tom, "getting up" a bit; "I told you I don't understand poetry, but I do understand what's an influitely better thing, and that's fine, any other to him than one of thorns. generous, manly feeling; and if there's a human being in the world incapable of wronging another in his mind or heart, or readier to help his fellow-man, it is Edward O'Connor: so say no more, James, if you please."

Tom had scarcely uttered the last word, when the key was turned in the door.

"Here's that infernal bailiff again!" said Tom, whose Irritability, increased by Reddy's paltry egotism and in-Justice, was at its boiling-pitch once more. He planted himself firmly in his chair, and putting on his fiercest frown, was determined to confront Mister Goggins with an aspect that should astonish him.

The door opened, and Mister Goggins made his appearance, presenting to the gentlemen in the room the hinder portion of his person, which made several indications of courtesy performed by the other half of his body, while he uttered the words, " Don't be astonished, gentlemen; Edward. you'll be used to it by-and-by." And with these words he kept backing toward Tom, making these nether demonstrations of civility, till Tom could plainly see the seame in the back of Mister Goggins' pantaloons.

Tom thought this was some new touch of the "freeand-easy" on Mister Goggins' part, and, losing all comnand of himself, he jumped from his chair, and with a vigorous kick gave Mister Goggins such a lively impression of his desire that he should leave the room, that Mister Goggins went head foremost down the stairs, litching his whole weight upon Dick Dawson and Edward "Connor, who were ascending the dark stairs, and to hom all his bows had been addressed. Overwhelmed Alth astonishment and twelve stone of bailiff, they were thrown back into the hall, and an immeuse uproar in the

's saage ensued. Edward and Dick were near coming in for some hard Isage from Goggins, conceiving it might be a preconcerted attempt on the part of his prisoners and their newly-arrived friends to achieve a rescue; and while he was rolling about on the ground, he roared to his evilranged janitor to look to the door first, and keep him from being "murthered" after.

Fortunately no evil consequences ensued, until matters could be explained in the hall, and Edward and Dick were introduced to the upper room, from which Goggins had been so suddenly ejected.

There the balliss demanded in a very angry tone the cause of Tom's conduct; and when it was found to be undy a mutual misunderstanding-that Goggins wouldn't take a liberty with a gentleman "in defliculties" for the world, and that Tom" wouldn't hurt a fly only under a mistake"-matters were cleared up to the satisfaction of all parties, and the real business of the meeting comtaenced:-that was to pay Tom's debt out of hand; and when the bailiff saw all demands, fees included, cleared off, the clouds from his brow cleared off also, he was the most amiable of sheriff's officers, and all his sentimentality returned. Edward did not seem quite to sympathise with his Amiability, so Goggins returned to the charge, while Tom and Dick were exchanging a few words with James Reddy. "You see, sir," said Goggins, "in the first place, it is quite beautiful to see the mind in adversity bearing up against the little antediluvian afflictions that will happen occasionally, and then how fine it is to remark the spark of generosity that kindles in the noble heart and rushes to the assistance of the destitute! I do assure you, sir, 't is a most beautiful sight to see the gentlemen in difliculties waiting here for their friends to come to their telief, like the last scene in Blue Beard, where sister Ann waves her han'kerchief from the tower-the tyrant is Main-and virtue rewarded!

"Ah, sir!" said he to Edward O'Connor, whose look of disgust at the wretched den caught the bailiff's attention, "don't entertain an antifassy from first imprissions, which is often desaivin'. I do pledge you my honor, sir, there is no place in the 'varsal world where human nature is visible in more attractive colors than in this humble

"trait."

Edward could not conceal a smile at the fellow's absur-"'v, though his sense of the ridiculous could not over-· me the disgust with which the place inspired him. He . we an admonstory touch to the chow of Dick Lawson. the with his friend Tom Durfy, followed Edward from the room, the bailtif bringing up the rear, and relocking the door on the unfortunate James Reddy, who was left "alone in his glory," to finish his slashing article against the successful men of the day.

Nothing more than words of recognition had passed between Reddy and Edward. In the first place, Edward's appearance at the very moment the other was indulging in illiberal observations upon him rendered the ill-tem-Dered poetaster dumb; and Edward attributed this distance of manner to a feeling of shyness which Reddy terials for the compounding of whiskey-punch might entertain at being seen in such a place, and thereman who seemed to shrink from it; but when he left the poor fellow's unfortunate situation.

It touched Tom Durfy's heart to hear these expressions heard maligned a few minutes before by the very person thankfulness on his own account, for the prompt service rendered to him. Edward made as light of his own kindness as he could, and begged Tom to think nothing of auch a trifle.

"One word I will say to you, Durfy, and I'm sure you'll pardon me for it."

"Could you say a thing to offend me?" was the answer. "You are to be married soon, I understand?"

"To-morrow," said Tom.

"Well, my dear Durfy, if you owe any more money, take a real friend's advice, and tell your pretty goodbearted widow the whole amount of your debts before you marry her."

lent me now is all I owe in the world; 'twas a tailor's bill, and I quite forgot it. You know, no one ever thinks of a tailor's bill. Debts, indeed!" added Tom, with surprise; "my dear fellow, I never could be much in debt, for the devil a one would trust me."

"An excellent reason for your unencumbered state," said Edward, "and I hope you pardon me."

"Pardon!" exclaimed Tom, "I esteem you for your kind and manly frankness."

In the course of their progress towards Dick's lodgings, Edward reverted to James Reddy's wretched condition, and found it was but some petty debt for which he was any verses I ever wrote in my life; and I am certain be arrested. He lamented, in common with Dick and Tom, the infatuation which made him desert a duty he could profitably perform by assisting his father in his farming concerns, to pursue a literary path, which could never be

> As Edward had engaged to meet Gusty in an hour, he parted from his companions and pursued his course alone. But, instead of proceeding immediately homeward, he retraced his steps to the den of the bailiff and gave a quiet tap at the door. Mister Goggins himself answered to the knock, and began a loud and florid welcome to Edward. who stopped his career of eloquence by laying a finger on | put the wine into it, as you towld me." his lip in token of silence. A few words sufficed to explain the motive of his visit. He wished to ascertain the sum for which the gentleman up-stairs was detained. The | cal?" bailiff informed him; and the money necessary to procure the captive's liberty was placed in his hand.

The bailiff cast one of his melodramatic glances at Edward, and said, "Didn't I tell you, sir, this was the place for calling out the noblest feelings of human nature?" "Can you oblige me with writing materials?" said

"I can, sir," said Goggius, proudly, "and with other materials* too, if you like-and 'pon my honor, I'll be proud to drink your health, for you're a raal gintleman." Edward, in the civilest manner, declined the offer, and wrote, or rather tried to write, the following note with a pen like a skewer, ink something thicker than mud, and on whity-brown paper:-"DEAR SIR, -I hope you will pardon the liberty I've taken in your temporary want of money. You can re-E. O'C." pay me at your convenience. Yours, Edward left the den, and so did James Reddy soon after—a better man. Though weak, his heart was not shut to the humanities of life; and Edward's kindness, in opening his eyes to the wrong he had done one man induced in his heart a kinder feeling towards all. He tore up his slashing article against successful men. Would that every disappointed man would do the same.

The bailiff was right; even so low a den as his becomes ennobled by the presence of active benevolence and prejudice reclaimed.

CHAPTER XLVII.

EDWARD, on returning to his hotel, found Gusty there before him, in great delight at having seen a "splendid" inspection, he having written a note on his arrival in town to a dealer stating his want of a first-rate hunter. "He's in the stable now," said Gusty; "for I desired

the man to wait, knowing you would be here soon." "I cannot see him now, Gusty," said Edward; will you have the kindness to tell the groom I can look at the horse in his own stable when I wish to purchase?"

Gusty departed to do the message, somewhat in wonder. for Edward loved a fine horse. But the truth was, Edward's disposable money, which he had intended for the purchase of a hunter, had a serious inroad made upon it by the debts he had discharged for other men, and he was forced to forego the pleasure he had proposed to himself in the next hunting season; and he did not like to consume any one's time, or raise false expectations, by affecting to look at disposable property with the eye of a purchaser, when he knew it was beyond his reach; and them. the flimey common-places of "I'll think of it," or "If I don't see something better," or any other of the twenty hackneyed excuses which idle people make, after consuming busy men's time, Edward held to be unworthy. He could ride a hack and deny hisself hunting for a whole season, but he would not unnecessarily consume the useful time of any man for ten minutes.

This may be sneered at by the idle and thoughtless: nevertheless, it is a part of the minor morality which is ever present in the conduct of a true gentleman.

Edward had promised to join Dick's dinner-purty on an impromptu invitation, and the clock striking the appointed hour warned Edward it was time to be off; so, jumping up on a jaunting car, he rattled off to Dick's lodgings.

where a jolly party was assembled ripe for fun. Amongst the guests was a rather remarkable man, a service one of Tom Durfy's friends whom he had asked a few preliminary hems; and after some little pilot leave to bring with him to dinner. Of course, Dick's card | tones from his throat, to show the way, his voice and a note of invitation for the gallant colonel was immediately dispatched; and he had but just arrived before Edward, who found a bustling sensation in the room as the colonel was presented to those already assembled. and Tom Durfy giving whispers, aside, to each person touching his friend; such as-" Very remarkable man"-"Seen great service"-" A little odd or so"-" A fund of most extraordinary anecdote," &c., &c. Now this Colonel Crammer was no other than Tom Loftus, whose acquaintance Dick wished to make, and who had been invited to the dinner after a preliminary fore had too much good breeding to thrust his civility on a visit; but Tom sent an excuse in his own name, and preferred being present under a fictitious one—this being one house he expressed his regret to his companions at the of the odd ways in which his humor broke out, desirous of giving people a "touch of his quality" before they knew him. He was in the habit of assuming various of compassion coming from the lips of the man he had | characters; a methodist missionary—the patentee of some unheard-of invention-the director of some new joint commiserated, and it raised his opinion higher of Edward, stock company—in short, anything which would give him whose hand he now shook with warm expressions of an opportunity of telling tremendous bouncers was equally good for Tom. His reason for assuming a military guise on this occasion was to bother Moriarty, whom he knew he should meet, and held a special reason for torment ing; and he knew he could achieve this, by throwing all the stories Moriarty was fond of telling about his own service into the shade, by extravagant inventions of "hair-breadth 'scapes" and feats by "flood and field." In deed, the dinner would not be worth mentioning but for the extraordinary capers Tom cut on the occasion, and the unheard of lies he squandered.

Dinner was announced by Andy, and with good appetite soup and fish were soon dispatched; sherry followed as a matter of necessity. The second course appeared "My dear O'Connor," said Tom, "the money you've and was not long under discussion when Dick called for the "champagne."

> Andy began to drag the tub towards the table, and Dick, impatient of delay, again called "champagne." "I'm bringin' it to you, sir," said Andy, tugging at the tub.

"Hand it round the table," said Dick.

Andy tried to lift the tub, "to hand it round the table;" but, finding he could not manage it, he whispered to Dick. "I can't get it up, sir."

Dick, fancying Andy meant he had got a flask net in a sufficient state of effervescence to expel its own cork, whispered in return, "Draw it, then."

"I was dhrawin' it to you, sir, when you stopped me." "Well, make haste with it," said Dick.

"Mister Dawson, I'll trouble you for a small slice of the turkey," said the colonel.

"With pleasure, colonel; but first do me the honor to take champagne. Andy—champagne!"

"Here it is, sir!" said Andy, who had drawn the tub close to Lick's chair. "Where's the wine, sir?" said Dick, looking first at the tub and then at Andy. "There, sir," said Andy, pointing down to the ice. " 1

Dick looked again at the tub, and said, "There is not a single bottle there—what do you mean, you stupid ras-

"To be sure, there's no bottle there, sir. The bottles is all on the sideboard, but every dhrop o' the wine is in the ice, as you towld me, sir; if you put your hand down into it you'll feel it, sir."

The conversation between master and man growing louder as it proceeded attracted the attention of the whole company, and those near the head of the table became acquainted as soon as Dick with the mistake Andy had made, and could not resist laughter; and as the cause of their merriment was told from man to man, and passed round the board, a roar of laughter uprose, not a little increased by Dick's look of vexation, which at length was forced to yield to the infectious merriment around him, and he laughed with the rest, and making a joke of the disappointment, which is the very best way of passing one off, he said that he had the honor of originating at his table a magnificent scale of hospitality; for though he had heard of company being entertained with a whole hogshead of claret, he was not aware of champagne being ever served in a tub before. The company were too determined to be merry to have their pleasantry put out of tune by so trifling a mishap, and it was generally voted that the joke was worth twice as much as the wine. Nevertheless, Dick could not help casting a reproachful look now and then at Andy, who had to run the gauntlet of many a joke cut at his expense, while he waited upon the wage at dinner, and caught a lowly-muttered anathema whenevehe passed near Dick's chair. In short, master and mas were both glad when the cloth was drawn, and the party could be left to themselves.

Then, as a matter of course, Dick called on the gentlemen to charge their glasses and fill high to a toast he had to propose-they would anticipate to whom he referred horse, as he said, which had been brought for Edward's a gentleman who was going to change his state of freedom for one of a happier bondage, &c., &c. Dick dashed of his speech with several mirth-moving allusions to the ant was coming over his friend Tom, and having I his composition with the proper quantity of "rosy wreaths," &c., &c., &c., naturally belonging to such speeches, he wound up with some hearty words, free from badinage, and meaning all they conveyed, and finished with the rhyming benediction of a "long life and a good wife" to him.

Tom having returned thanks in the same laughing style that Dick proposed his health, and bade farewell to the lighter follies of bachelorship for the more serious ones of wedlock, the road was now open for any one who was vocally inclined. Dick asked one or two, who said they were not within a bottle of their singing-point yet, but Tom Durfy was sure his friend the colonel would favor

"With pleasure," said the colonel; "and I'll sing something appropriate to the blissful situation of philandering in which you have been indulging of late, my friend. wish I could give you any idea of the song as I heard it warbled by the voice of an Indian princess, who was attached to me once, and for whom I ran enormous risks - but no matter - that's past and gone, but the soft tones of Zulima's voice will ever hunnt my heart! The song is a favorite where I heard it-on the borders of Cashmere, and is supposed to be sung by a fond woman in the valley of the nightingales—'tis so in the original, but as we have no nightingales in Ireland, I have substituted the dove in the little translation I have made, which, if you will allow me, I'll attempt.

Loud cries of "Hear, hear!" and tapping of applaud-Colonel Crammer, who had seen a monstrous deal of ing hands on the table followed, while the colonel gave cended in all the glory of song.

THE DOVE-SONG.

" Coo! Coo! Coo! Coo! Thus did I hear the turtle-dove. Ooo! Coo! Coo! Murmuring forth her love; And as she flew from tree to tree, How melting seemed the notes to ma-Coo! Coo! Coo!

So like the voice of lovers, 'Twas passing sweet to hear The birds within the covers, In the spring-time of the year.

" Coo! Coo! Coo! Coo! Thus the song's returned again— Coo! Coo! Coo! Through the shady glen;

But there I wandered lone and sad, While every bird around was glad. Coo! Coo! Coo! Thus so fondly murmured they. Coo! Coo! Coo! While my love was away.

And yet the song to lovers, Though sad, is sweet to hear, From birds within the covers, In the spring-time of the year."

The colonel's song, given with Tom Loftus' good voice. was received with great applause, and the fellows all voted it catching, and began "cooing" round the table like a parcel of pigeons.

"A translation from an eastern poet, you say?"

"Yes," said Toin. "Tis not very eastern in its character," said Moriarty. "I mean a free translation, of course," added the mock

"Would you favorus with the song again, in the original?" added Moriarty. Tom Loftus did not know one syllable of any other language than his own, and it would not have been convenient to talk gibberish to Moriarty, who had a smattering of some of the eastern tongues; so he declined giving his Cashmerian song in its native purity, because, as he raid, he never could manage to speak their dialect, though he understood it reasonably well.

"But there's a gentleman, I am sure, will sing some other song-and a better one, I have no doubt," said Tom. with a very humble prostration of his head on the table, and anxious by a fresh song to get out of the dilemma in which Moriarty's question was near placing him.

"Not a better, colonel," said the gentleman who was addressed, "but I cannot refuse your call, and I will do my best; hand me the port wine, pray; I always take a glass of port before I sing-I think 'tis good for the throat—what do you say, colonel?"

"When I want to sing particularly well," said Tom, "I drink canary."

The gentleman smiled at the whimsical answer, tossed off his glass of port, and began.

LADY MINE.

"Lady mine! lady mine! Take the rosy wreathe I twine, All its sweets are less than thine, Lady, lady mine! The blush that on thy cheek is found Bloometh fresh the whole year round; Thy sweet breath as sweet gives sound, Lady, lady mine!

"Lady mine! lady mine! How I love the graceful vine, Whose tendrils mock thy ringlet's twine, Lady, lady mine! How I love that gen'rous tree, Whose ripe clusters promise me Bumper's bright, -to pledge to thee. Lady, lady minet

" Lady mine! lady mine! Like the stars that nightly shine, Thy sweet eyes shed light divine, Lady, lady mine! And as sages wise, of old, From the stars could fate unfold, Thy bright eyes my fortune told, Lady, lady mine!"

to the particular "thes" which each individual had setainly thought of Fanny Dawson.

Let tectotalers say what they please, there is a genial influence inspired by wine and song-not in excess, but in that wholesome degree which stirs the blood and warms the fancy; and as one raises the glass to the lip, over which some sweet name is just breathed from the depth of the heart, what libation so fit to pour to absent friends as wine? What is wine? It is the grape present in another form; its essence is there, though the fruit which produced it grew thousands of miles away, and perished years ago. So the object of many a tender thought may be spiritually present, in defiance of spaceand fond recollections cherished in defiance of time.

As the party became more convivial, the mirth began to assume a broader form. Tom Durfy drew out Moriarty on the subject of his services, that the mock colonel might throw every new achievement into the shade; and this he did in the most barefaced manner, but mixing so must do something novel here, or we are lost-startle them much of probability with his audacious fiction that those by fresh practice—the bayonet will no longer avail you who were not up to the joke only supposed him to be a club your muskets, and hit the horses over the noses, and very great romancer; while those friends who were in they'll smell danger.' They took my advice; of course Loftus' confidence exhibited a most capacious stomach | we first delivered a withering volley, and then to it we for the marvelous, and backed up his lies with a ready | went in flail fashion, thrashing away with the butt-ends of credence. If Moriarty told some fearful incident of our muskets; and sure enough the French were astona tiger bunt, the colonel capped it with something more, ished and driven bask in amazement. So tremendous, wonderful, of slanghtering hons in a wholesale way, like sir, was the hitting on our side, that in many instances rabbits. When Moriarty expatiated on the intensity of tropical heat, the colonel would upset him with something more appalling.

"Now, sir," said Loftus, "let me ask you what is the day, and have used it ever since as a snuff-box." greatest amount of heat you have ever experienced-I say experienced, not heard of-for that goes for nothing. always speak from experience."

"Well, sir," said Moriarty, "I have known it to be so hot in India that I have had a hole dug in the ground ander my tent, and sat in it, and put a table standing over the hole, to try and guard me from the intolerable fervor of the eastern sun, and even then I was hot. What do vou say to that, colonel?" asked Moriarty, triumphantly. "Have you ever been in the West Indies?" inquired | man. Loftus.

solutel launched out fearlessly.

seen in the West Indies an umbrella burned over a man's head."

"Wonderfull" cried Loftus' backers. "'Tis strange, sir," said Moriarty, "that we have never seen that mentioned by any writer. "Easily accounted for, sir," said Loftns. "Tis so pole." common a circumstance that it ceases to be worthy of observation. An author writing of this country might as well remark that the apple-women are to be seen sitting at the corners of the streets. That's nothing, sir; but party. I and a few curious friends, and certainly we witthere are two things of which I have personal knowledge, rather remarkable. One day of intense heat (even for that climate) I was on a visit at the plantation of a friend of mine, and it was so out-o'-the-way scorching that our lips | a sign. Then as for frost!-I could tell you such incrediwere like cinders, and we were obliged to have black | ble things of its intensity; our butter, for instance, was as slaves pouring sangaree down our throats by gallons-I don't hesitate to say, gallons—and we thought we could not have survived through the day; but what could we think of our sufferings, when we heard that several negroes, who had gone to sleep under the shade of some cocoanut trees, had been scalded to death?"

"Scalded?" said his friends; "burnt, you mean." "No, scalded; and how do you think? The intensity of the heat had cracked the cocoanuts, and the boiling milk inside dropped down and produced the futal result. The same day a remarkable accident occurred at the battery; the French were hovering round the island at the time, and the governor, being a timid man, ordered the guns to be always kept loaded."

"I never heard of such a thing in a battery in my life, sir," said Moriarty.

"Nor I either," said Loftus, "Mil then."

"What was the governor's name, sir," inquired Moriarty, pursuing his train of doubt.

"You must excuse me, captain, from naming him," said Loftus, with readiness "after incautiously saying he was fimid."

"Hear, hear!" said all the friends. "But to pursue my story, sir:-the guns were loaded, and with the intensity of the heat went off, one after another, and quite riddled one of his Majesty's frigates that was lying in the harbor." "That's one of the most difficult riddles to comprehend I ever heard," said Moriarty.

"The frigate answered the riddle with her guns, sir, I promise you." "What!" exclaimed Moriarty, " are on the fort of her own king?" "There is an honest principle exists among sailors, sir, to return fire under all circumstances, wherever it comes from, friend or foe. Fire, of which they know the value so well, they won't take from anybody."

"And what was the consequence?" said Moriarty. "Sir, it was the most harmless broadside ever delivered from the ports of a British frigate; not a single house or human being was injured—the day was so hot that every sentinel had sunk on the ground in utter exhaustion—the whole population were asleep; the only loss of life which occurred was that of a blue macaw, which belonged to the commandant's daughter."

"Where was the macaw, may I beg to know?" said Moriarty, cross-questioning the colonel in the spirit of a counsel for the defense on a capital indictment.

"In the drawing-room window, sir." "Then surely the ball must have done some damage in the house?"

"Not the least, sir," said Loftus, sipping his wine. "Surely, Colonel!" returned Moriarty, warming, "the ball could not have killed the macaw without injuring the house?"

"My dear sir," said Tom, "I did not say the ball killed the macaw; I said the macaw was killed; but that was in consequence of a splinter from an epaulment of the southeast angle of the fort which the shot struck and glanced off harmlessly-except for the casualty of the macaw."

Moriarty returned a kind of grunt, which implied that, though he could not further question, he did not beiseve. Under such circumstances taking snuff is a great relief to a man; and, as it happened, Moriarty, in taking anuff, could gratify his nose and his vanity at the same time, for he sported a silver-gilt snuff-box which was presented to him in some extraordinary way, and bore a grand inscription.

On this "piece of plate" being produced, of course it The song was just in the style to catch gentlemen went round the table, and Moriarty could scarcely conceal after dinner—the second verse particularly, and many a the satisfaction he felt as each person read the engraven glass was emptied of a "bumper bright," and pledged testimonial of his worth. When it had gone the circuit of the board, Tom Loftus put his hand into his pocket lected for his devotion. Edward, at that moment, cer- and pulled out the butt-end of a rifle, which is always furnished with a small box, cut out of the solid part of the wood, and covered with a plate of brass acting on a hinge. This box, intended to carry small implements for the use of the rifleman; to keep his piece in order, was filled with snuff, and Tom said, as he laid it down on the table. "This is my snuff-box, gentlemen; not as handsome as my gallant friend's at the opposite side of the table, but extremely interesting to me. It was previous to one of our dashing affairs in Spain that our riflemen were thrown out in front and on the flanks. The rifles were supported by the light companies of the regiments in advance, and it was in the latter duty I was engaged. We had to feel our way through a wood, and had cleared it of the enemy, when, as we debouched from the wood on the opposite side, we were charged by an overwhelming force of Polish lancers and cuirassiers. Retreat was impossible -resistance almost hopeless. 'My lads,' said I, 'we the butt-ends of the muskets snapped off like tobaccopipes, and the field was quite strewn with them after the affair: I picked one of them up as a little memento of the

Every one was amused by the outrageous romancing of the colonel but Moriarty, who looked rather disgusted, because he could not edge in a word of his own at all; he gave up the thing now in despair, for the colonel had it all his own way, like the bull in a china-shop; the more startling the bouncers he told the more successful were his anconotes, and he kept pouring them out with the most astounding rapidity; and though all voted him the greatest liar they ever met, none suspected he was not a military

Dick wanted Edward O'Connor, who sat beside him, "Never," said Moriarty, who, once entrapped into this to sing: but Edward whispered, "For Heaven's sake come in for the inheritance of a large property." admission, was directly at the colonel's mercy,—and the don't stop the flow of lava from that mighty cruption of "What!—Handy Andy?" Exclaimed those w lies!—he's a perfect Vesuvius of mendacity. You'll never his name.
"Then, my good sir, you know nothing of heat. I have meet his like again, so make the most of him while you "Handy Andy," said Dick, "is now a man of fortune!"

have him. Pray, sir," said Edward to the colonel, "have you ever been in any of the cold climates? I am induced to ask you, from the very wonderful anecdotes you have told of the hot ones."

"Bless you, sir, I know every corner about the north

"In which of the expeditions, may I ask, were you en gaged?" inquired Moriarty.

"In none of them, sir. We knocked up a little amateur nessed wonders. You talk here of a sharp wind; but the wind is so sharp there that it cut off our beard and whickers. Boreas is a great barber, sir, with his north pole for hard as a rock; we were obliged to knock it off with a chisel and hammer, like a mason at a piece of granite and it was necessary to be careful of your eyes at breakfast, the splinters used to fly about so; indeed one of our party did lose the use of his eye from a butter splinter. But the oddest thing of all was to watch two men talking to each other: you could observe the words, as they came out their mouths, suddenly frozen and dropping down in little pellets of ice at their feet, so that, after a long conversation, you might see a man standing up to his knees in his own eloquence."

They ail roared with laughter at this last touch of the marvelous, but Loftus preserved his gravity.

"I don't wonder, gentlemen, at your not receiving that as truth-I told you it was incredible-in short, that is the reason I have resisted all temptations to publis. Murray, Longmans. Colburn, Bentley, ALL the publishers have offered me unlimited terms, but I have always refused-not that I am a rich man, which makes the temptation of the thousands I might realize the harder to withstand; 'tie not that the gold is not precious to me, but there is something dearer to me than gold-it is my character for veracily-and, therefore, as I am convinced the public would not believe the wonders I have witnessed, I confine the recital of my adventures to the social circle. But what profession affords such scope for varied incident as that of the soldier? Change of clime, danger, vicissitude, love, war, privation one day, profusion the next, darkling dangers, and sparkling joys! Zounds! there's nothing like the life of a soldier! and, by the powers! I'll give you a song in its praise."

The proposition was received with cheers and Tom rattled away these ringing rhymes-

THE BOWLD SOJER BOY.

"Oh there's not a trade that's going Worth showing, Or knowing, Like that from glory growing, For a bowld sojer boy; Where right or left we go, Sure you know, Friend or foe, Will have the hand or toe From a bowld sojer boy! There's not a town we march thro', But the ladies, looking arch thro', The window-panes, will search thro', The ranks to find their joy; While up the street, Each girl you meet, With look so sly, Will cry 'My eyet Oh, isn't he a darling, the bowld sojer boy!"

" But when we get the route,

How they pout And they shout While to the right about Goes the bowld sojer boy. Oh, 'tis then that ladies fair In despair Tear their hair, But 'the divil-a-one I care,' Says the bowld sojer boy. For the world is all before us, Where the landladies adore us, And ne'er refuse to score us, But chalk us up with joy; We taste her tap, We tear her cap,— 'Oh, that's the chap For me! Says she; 'Oh, isn't he a darling, the bowld sojer boy.'

III.

"Then come along with me, Gramachree. And you'll see How happy you will be With your bowld sojer boy: Faith! if you're up to fun, With me run; "Twill be done In the snapping of a gun," Says the bowld sojer boy: 'And 'tis then that without scandal, Myself will proudly dandle The little farthing candle Of our mutual flame, my joy! May his light shine As bright as mine, Till in the line He'll blaze, And raise The glory of his corps, like a bowld sojer boy!"

Andy entered the room while the song was in progress, and handed a letter to Dick, which, after the song was over, and he had asked pardon of his guests, he opened. "By Jovel you sing right well, Colonel," said one of the party. "I think the gallant colonel's songs nothing in com parison with his wonderful stories," said Moriarty. "Gentlemen," said Dick, "wonderful as the colonel" recitals have been, this letter conveys a piece of information more surprising than anything we have heard this day. That stupid fellow who spoiled our champagne has "What!-Handy Andy?" sxclaimed those who knew

CHAATER XLVIII.

IT was a note from Squire Egan which conveyed the news to Dick that caused so much surprise; the details ried. of the case were not even hinted at; the bare fact alone was mentioned, with a caution to preserve it still a secret from Andy, and appointing an hour for dinner at "Morri-Fon's" next day, at which hotel the Squire expected to arrive from the country, with his lady and Fanny Dawcon, en route for London. Till dinner-time, then, the day following. Dick was obliged to lay by his impatience as to the "why and wherefore" of Andy's sudden advancement; but as the morning was to be occupied with Tom Durfy's wedding, Dick had enough to keep him engaged in the meantime.

At the appointed hour a few of Tom's particular friends were in attendance to witness the ceremony, or, to use their own phrase, "to see him turned off," and among them was Tom Loftus. Dick was holding out his hand to "the colonel," when Tom Durfy stepped between and introduced him under his real name. The masquerading trick of the night before was laughed at. with the assurance from Dick that it only fulfilled all he had ever heard of the Protean powers of a gentleman whom he so much wished to know. A few minute's conversation in the recess of a window put Tom Loftus and and Dick the Devil on perfectly good terms, and Loftus proposed to Dick that they should execute the old estabushed trick on a bridegroom, of snatching the first kiss from the bride.

"You must get in Tom's way," said Loftus, "and I'll kiss her."

"Why, the fact is," said Dick, "I had proposed that pleasure to myself; and, if it is all the same to you, you can justle Tom, and I'll do the remainder in good style, I promise you."

"That I can't agree to," said Loftus; "but as it appears we both have set our heart on cheating the bride-

Tom Durfy is not done."

This was agreed upon, and many minutes did not clapse till the bride made her appearance, and "hostilithe "high contracting parties" first opened his book and then his mouth, and in such solenin tones, that it was enough to frighten even a widow, much less a bachelor. As the ceremony verged to a conclusion, Tom Lofins and Dick the Devil edged up towards the vantage-ground on either side of the blooming widow, now nearly finished into a wife, and stood like greyhounds in the slip, ready to start after puss (only puss ought to be spelt here with a B). The widow, having been married before, was less nervous than Durfy, and, sus-Decting the intended game, determined to foil ooth the brigands, who intended to rob the bridegroom of his right; so, when the last word of the ceremony was spoken, and Loftus and Dick made a simultaneous dart upon her, she very adroitly ducked, and allowed the two "ruggers and rievers" to rush into each other's arms, and rub their noses together, while Tom Durfy and his blooming bride scaled their contract very agreeably without their noses getting in each other's way.

Loftns and Dick had only a laugh at their own expense, instead of a ki-s at Tom's, upon the failure of their plot; but Loftus, in a whisper to Dick, vowed he would execute a trick upon the "pair of them" before the day was over.

There was a breakfast as usual, and chicken and longue and wine, which, taken in the morning, are Provocative of eloquence; and, of course, the proper Unantity of healths and toasts were executed selon la Tale, until it was time for the bride and bridegroom to bow and blush and curtsey out of the room, and make themselves food for a paragraph in the morning papers, under the title of the "happy pair," who set off in a handsome chariet, &c., &c.

Tom Durfy had engaged a pretty cottage in the neighborhood of Ciontarf to pass the honeymoon. Tom Loftus knew this, and knew, moreover, that the sitting-room looked out on a small lawn which lay before the house, screened by a hedge from the road, but with a circular sweep leading up to the house, and a gate of ingress and gress at either end of the hedge. In this sitting-room left her was, that, though she was deserted, and a child Tom, after lunch, was pressing his lady fair to take a left on her hands, still she was an honest woman. That glass of champagne, when the entrance-gute was thrown open, and a hackney jaunting car with Tom Loftus and a friend or two upon it, driven by a special ragamushin blowing a tin horn, rolled up the skimping avenue, and as t scoured past the windows of the sitting-room. Tom Loftus and the other passengers kissed hands to the asionished bride and bridegroom, and shouted, "Wish you

The thing was so sudden that Durfy and the widow, not seeing Loftus, could hardly comprehend what it meant, and both ran to the window; but just as they reached it, up drove another car, freighted with two or three more wild rascals who followed the lead which had been given them; and as a long train of cars were seen in the distance all driving up to the avenue, the widow, with a timid little scream, threw her handkerchief over her face and ran into a corner. Tom did not know whether to laugh or be angry, but, being a good-humored fellow, he ratisfied himself with a few oaths against the incorrigible Loftus and when the cortège had passed, endeavored to testo e the startled fair one to her serenity.

Squire Egan and party arrived to the appointed hour at men hotel, where Dick was waiting to receive them, and, of course, his inquiries were immediately directed to the "xtraordinary circumstance of Andy's elevation, the details of which he desired to know. These we shall not give in the expanded form in which Dick heard them, but "Ddeavor to condense, as much as possible, within the imits to which we are prescribed.

The title of Scatterbrain had never been inherited directly from father to son; it had descended in a zigzag ashion, most appropriate to the nam e, nephews and Cousins having come in for the coronet and the property for some generations. The late lord had led a rough bachclor life up to the age of sixty, and then thought it not Worth while to marry, though many mammas and entrap the sexagenarian.

to one but himself was cognizant of the fact.

and priest being joint possessors of the secret?"

Listen, gentle reader, and you shall hear how none but Lord Scatterbrain knew Lord Scatterbrain was mar-gratification of his passions-no wealth he would not making certain general inquiries. It was found, on comsquander, no deceit he would not practise, no disguise he would not assume. Therefore, gold, and falsehood, and masquerading were extensively employed by this reckless roue in the service of Venus, in which service, combined with that of Bacchus, his life was entirely passed

Often he assumed the guise of a man in humble life, to approximate some object of his desire, whom fine clothes and brib, ry would have instantly warned; and in two many cases his artifices were successful. It was in one of these adventures he cast his eyes upon the woman hitherto known in this story under the name of the Widow Rooney; but all his practices against her virtue were unavailing, and nothing but a marriage could accomplish what he had set his fancy upon; but even this would not stop him, for he married her.

The Widow Rooney has appeared no very inviting personage through these pages, and the reader may wonder that a man of rank could proceed to such desperate lengths upon such slight temptation; but, gentle reader, she was young and attractive when she was married-never to say handsome, but good-looking, decidedly, and with that sort of figure which is comprehended in the phrase "a fine girl."

And has that fine girl altered into the Widow Rooney f Ahl poverty and hardship are sore trials to the body as well as to the mind. Too little is it considered, while we gaze on aristocratic beauty, how much good food, soft ying, warm wrapping, ease of mind, have to do with the attractions which command our admiration. Many a hand moulded by nature to give elegance of form to a kid glove, is "stinted of its fair proportion" by grubbing toil. The foot which might have excited the admiration of a groom, let us both start fair, and it is odd if between us | ball-room, peeping under a flounce of lace in a saturable surprise, partook of regret rather than satand treading the mazy dance, will grow coarse and broad by tramping in its native state over toilsome miles, bearing perchance to a market town some few eggs, whose whole produce would not purchase the sandal-rie of my lady's slipper; will grow red and rough by standing in wet trenches, and feeling the winter's frost. The neck on which diamonds might have worthily sparkled, will look less tempting when the biting winter has hung fcicles there for gems. Cheeks formed as fresh for dimpling blushes, eyes as well to sparkle, and lips to smile, as those which shed their brightness and their witchery in the tapestried saloon, will grow pale with want, and forget their dimples, when smiles are not there to wake them; lips become compressed and drawn with anxious thought, and eyes the brightest are quenched of their fires by many tears,

Of all these trials poor Widow Rooney had enough Her husband, after living with her a month, in the character of a steward to some great man in a distant part of the country, left her one day for the purpose of transacting business at a fair, which, he said, would require his absence for some time. At the end of a week, a letter was sent to her, stating that the make-believe steward had robbed his master extensively, and had fled to America, whence he promised to write to her, and send her means to follow him, requesting, in the meantime, her silence, in case any inquiry should be made about him. This villianous trick was played off the more readily, from the fact that a steward had absconded at the time. and the difference in the name the cruel profligate accounted for by saying that, as he was hiding at the moment he married her, he had assumed another name.

The poor deserted girl, fully believing this trumped-up tale, obeyed with untlinching fidelity the injunctions of her betrayer, and while reports were flying abroad of the absconded steward, she never breathed a word of what had been confided to her, and accounted for the absence of "Rooney" in various ways of her own; so that all trace of the profligate was lost, by her remaining inactive in making the smallest inquiry about him, and her very fidelity to her betrayer became the means of her losing all power of procuring his discovery. For months she trusted all was right; but when moon followed moon, and she gave birth to a boy without hearing one word of his father, misgiving came upon her, and the only consolation child was the hero of our tale. The neighbours passed some ill-natured remarks about her, when it began to be suspected that her husband would never let her know more about him; for she had been rather a saucy lady, holding up her nose at poor men, and triumphing in the catching of the "steward," a man well to do in the world; and it may be remembered, that this same spirit existed in her when Andy's rumoured marriage with Matty gave the prospect of her affairs being retrieved, for she displayed her love of pre-eminence to the very first person who gave her the good news. The ill-nature of her neighbors, however, after the birth of her child and thy desertion of her husband, inducing her to leave the scene of her unmerited wrongs and annoyances, she suddenly decamped, and, removing to another part of Ireland, the poor woman began a life hardship to support herself and rear the offspring of her unfortunate marriage. In this task she was worthily assisted by one of her brothers, who pitied her condition, and joined her in her retreat. He married in course of time, and his wife died in giving birth to Oonah, who was soon deprived of her other parent by typhus fever, that terrible scourge of the poor; so that the praiseworthy desire of the brother to befriend his sister only involved her, as it happened in the deeper difficulty of supporting two children instead of one. This she did heroically, and the orphan girl rewarded her, by proving a greater comfort than her own child; for Andy had inherited in all its raciness the blood of the Scatterbrains, and his deeds, as recorded in this history, prove he was no unworthy representative of that illustrious title. To return to his father-who had done the grievous wrong to the poor peasant girl: he lived his life of proffigacy through, and in a foreign country died at last; but on his death-bed the scourge of conscience rendered every helpless hour an age of woe. Bitterest of all was the thought of the wife deceived, deserted, and unacknowldaughters spread their nets and arrayed their charms to edged. To face his last account with such fearful crime upon his head he dared not, and made all the reparation The truth was, he had quaffed the cup of licentious now in his power, by avowing his marriage in his last will pleasure all his life, after which he thought matrimony, and testament, and giving all the information in his would prove insipid. The mere novelty induces some power to trace his wife, if living, or his heir, if such exmen, under similar circumstances, to 'try the holy estate; isted. He enjoined, by the most sacred injunctions upon but matrimony could not offer to Lord Scatterbrain the him to whom the charge was committed, that neither cost charms of novelty, for he had heen once married, though nor trouble should be spared in the search, leaving a large sum in ready money besides, to establish the right, in | -- in fact, so witty!" The render will certainly say, "Here's an Irish bull; case his nephew disputed the will. By his own order, his how could a man be married, without, at least, a woman death was kept secret, and secretly his agent set to work that he quite forgot Bridget rhua. But that hely did not to discover any trace of the heir This, in consequence of leave him long in his happy obliviousness. One day while the woman changing her place of abode, became more difficult; and it was not until after very minote inquiry that some trace was picked up, and a letter written to the There was nothing at which he ever stopped for the parish priest of the district to which she had removed, paring dates some time after, that it was this very lette. to Father Blake which Andy had purloined from the post office, and the Squire had thrown into the fire; so that our hero was very near, by his blundering, destroying his own fortune. Luckily for him, however, an untiring and intelligent agent was engaged in his cause, and a subsequent inquiry, and finally a personal visit to Father Blake, cleared the matter up satisfactorily, and the widow was enabled to produce such proof of her identity, and that of her son, that Handy Andy was indisputably Lord Scatterbrain; and the whole affair was managed so secretly, that the death of the late lord, and the claim of title and estates in the name of the rightful heir, were announced at the same moment; and the "Honorable Sackville," instead of coming into possession of the peerage and property, and fighting his adversary at the great advantage of possession, could only commence a suit to drive him out, if he sued at all.

Our limits compel us to this brief sketch of the circumstances through which Handy Andy was entitled to and became possessed of a property and a title, and we must now say something of the effects produced by the intelligence on the parties most concerned.

The Honorable Sackville Scatterbrain, on the advice of high legal authority, did not altempt to dispute a succession of which such satisfactory proofs existed, and, fortunately for himself, had knocked up a watering-place match, while he was yet in the bloom of heirship presumplive to a peerage, with the daughter of an English millionaire.

When the Widow Rooney heard the extraordinary turn affairs had taken, her emotions, after the first few hours isfaction. She looked upon her past life of suffering, and felt us if Fate had cheated her. She, a peeress, had passed her life in peverty and suffering, with contempt from those over whom she had superior rights; and the few years of the prosperous future before her offered her poor compensation for the pinching past. But after such selfish considerations, the maternal feeling came to her relief, and she rejoiced that her son was a lord. But then came the terrible thought of his marriage to dash her joy and triumph.

This was a source of grief to Oonah as well. "If he wasn't married," she would say to herself, "I might be Lady Scatterbrain;" and the tears would busst through poor Oonah's fingers as she held them up to her eyes and sobbed heavily, till the poor girl would try to gather consolation from the thought that, maybe, Andy's altered circumstances would make her disregarded. "There would be plenty to have him now," thought she, " and he wouldn't think of me, maybe- so 'tis well as it is."

When Andy heard that he was a lord-a real lord-and, after the first shock of astonishment, could comprehend that wealth and power were in his possession, he, though the most interested person, never thought, as the two women had done, of the desperate strait in which his marriage placed him, but broke out into short peals of laughter, and exclaimed in the intervals, "that it was mighty quare;" and when, after much questioning, any intelligible desire he had could be understood, the first one he clearly expressed was " to have a goold watch."

He was made, however, to understand that other things than "goold watches" were of more importance; and the Squire, with his characteristic good nature, endeavored to open Andy's comprehension to the nature of his altered situation. This, it may be supposed, was rather a com plicated piece of work, and too difficult to be set down in black and white; the most intelligible portions to Andy were his immediate removed from servitude, and a ready-made suit of gentlemanly apparel, which made Andy pay several visits to the looking-glass, Goodnatured as the Squire was, it would have been equally awkward to him as to Andy for the newly fledged lord, though a lord, to have a scat at his table, neither could be remain in an inferior position in his house; so Dick, who loved fun, volunteered to take Andy under his especial care to London, and let him share his lodgings, as a bachelor may do many things which a man surrounded by his family cannot. Besides, in a place distant from such extraordinary chances and changes as those which befell our hero, the sudden and startling difference of position of the parties not being known renders it possible for a gentleman to do the good-natured thing which Dick un dertook, without compromising himself. In Dublin it would not have done for Dick Dawson to allow the man who would have held his horse the day before, to share the same board with him merely because Fortune had had played one of her frolics and made Andy a lord; but in London the case was different.

To London therefore they proceeded. The incidents of the journey, sea-sickness included, which so astonished the new traveller, we pass over, as well as the numberless mistakes in the great metropolis, which afforded Dick plentiful amusement, though, in truth, Dick had better objects in view than laughing at Andy's embarrassmente in his new position. He really wished to help him in the difficult path into which the new lord had been thrust, and did this in a merry sort of way more successfully than by serious drilling. It was hard to break Andy of the habit of saying "Misther Dick," when addressing him, but, at last, "Misther Dawson" was established. Eating with his knife, drinking as loudly as a horse, and other like accomplishments, were not so easily got under. yet it was wonderful how much he improved, as his shyness grew less, and his consciousness of being a lord

But, if the good nature of Dick had not prompted him to take Andy into training, the newly discovered nobleman would not have long been in want of society. It was wonderful how many persons were eager to show civility to his lerdship, and some amongst them even went so far as to discover relationship. Plenty were soon ready to take Lord Scatterbrain here, and escort him there, accompany him to exhibitions and other public places, and grew stronger.

charmed all the time with his lordship's remarks-"they were so original "-" quite delightful to meet something so fresh "-" how remarkably clever the Irish were!" Such were among the observations his ignorant blunders produced; and he who, as Handy Andy, had been anathematised all his life as a "stupid rascal," "a blundering thief," "a thick-headed brute," &c., under the title of Lord Scatterbrain all of a sudden was voted " tastly amusing-a little eccentric, perhaps, but so droll

Dick was absent, and Andy rocking on a chair before the .re, twirling the massive gold chain of his gold watch round | per. is forefinger, and uncoiling it again, his repose was sudlenly disturbed by the appearance of Bridget, herself, acompanied by Shan More and a shrimp of man in rusty plack, who turned out to be a shabby attorney who adranced money to convey his lady client and her brother to London, for the purpose of making a dash at the lord at ince, and securing a handsome sum by a coup de maig.

Andy, though taken by suprise, was resolute. Bitter words were exchanged; and as they seemed likely to lead to blows. Andy prudently laid hold of the poker, and, in language not quite suited to a noble lord, swore he would see what the inside of Shan More's head was made of, if he attempted to advance upon him. Bridget screamed and scolded, while the attorney endeavored to keep the peace, and, beyond everything, urged Lord Scatterbrain to enter at once into written engagements for a handsome settlement upon his "lady."

"Lady!" exclaimed Andy; "oh!-a pretty lady she

"I'm as good a lady as you are a lord, anyhow," cried

Bridget. "Altercation will do no good, my lord and my lady," said the attorney; "let me suggest the propriety of your writing an engagement at once;" and the little man pushed pen, ink, and paper towards Andy.

"I can't, I tell you!" cried Andy. "You must!" roared Shan More.

'Bad luck to you, how can I when I never' learned?" "Your lordship can make your mark," said the attorney. "Faith I can—with a poker," cried Andy; "and you'd better take care, muster parchment. Make my mark, indeed-do you think I'd disgrace the House o' Peers by lettin' on that a lord couldn't write?-Quit the buildin', I tell you! 11

In the midst of the row, which now rose to a tremendous pitch, Dick returned; and after a severe reprimand to the pettifogger for his sinister attempt on Andy, referred him to Lord Scatterbrain's solicitor. It was not such an easy matter to silence Bridget, who extended her claws towards her lord and master in a very menacing manner, calting down bitter imprecations on her own head if she wouldn't have her rights.

Every now and then between the bursts of the storm Andy would exclaim, "Get out!"

"My lord," said Dick, "remember your dignity."

"Av coorse!" said Andy; "but still she must get out!" The house was at last cleared of the uproarious party; but though Andy got rid of their presence, they left their sting behind. Lord Scatterbrain felt, for the first time, that a lord can be very unhappy. Dick hurried him away at once to the chambers of the law agent, but he, being closeted on some very important business with another client on their arrival, returned an answer to their application for a conference, which they forwarded through the double doors of this sanctum by a hard-looking man with a pen behind his ear, that he could not have the pleasure of seeing them till the next morning. Lord Scatterbrain passed a more unhappy night than he had ever done in his life-even than that when he was tied up to the old tree-croaked at by ravens, and the lespised of rats. Negotiations were opened the next day between the pettifogger on Bridger's side and the law agent of the noble lord, and the arguments, pro and con, lay thus:

In the first place, the opening declaration was-Lord Scatterbrain never would live with the aforesaid Bridget.

Auswered—that nevertheless, as she was his lawful wife, a provision suitable to her rank must be made.

They (the claimants) were asked to name a sum. The sum was considered exhorbitant; it being argued that when her husband had determined never to live with her, he was in a far different condition, therefore it was unfair to seek so large a separate maintenance now.

The pettifogger threatened that Lady Scatterbrain would run in debt, which Lord Scatterbrain must discharge. My Lord's agent suggested that my Lady would be advertised in the public papers, and the public cautioned against giving her credit.

A sum could not be agreed upon, though a fair one was offered on Andy's part; for the greediness of the pettifogger, who was to have a share of the plunder, made him hold out for more, and negotiations were broken off for some days.

Poor Andy was in a wretched state of vexation. It was bad enough that he was married to this abominable woman, without an additional plague of being persecuted by her. To such an amount this rose at last, that she and her big brother dodged him every time he left the house, so that in self defence he was obliged to become a close prisoner in his own lodgings. All this at last became so intolerable to the captive, that he urged a speedy settlement of the vexations question, and a larger separate maintenance was granted to the detestable woman than would otherwise have been ceded, the only stipulation of a stringent nature made being, that Lord Scatterbrain should be free from the persecutions of his hateful wife for the future.

CHAPTER XLIX.

Squire Egan, with his lady and Fanny Dawson, had now arrived in London; Murtough Murphy, too, had joined them, his services being requisite in working the petition against the return of the sitting member for the county. This had so much promise of success about it, that the opposite party, who had the sheriff for the county in their interest, bethought of a novel expedient to frustrate the petition when a reference to the poll was required.

They declared the principal poll-book was lost, This seemed not very satisfactory to one side of the committee, and the question was asked, "how could it be lost?" The answer was one which Irish contrivance alone could have invented: " It fell into a pot of broth, and the dog ale it."*

his protracted the contest for some time; but eventually, in spite of the dog's devouring knowledge so greedily, the Squire was declared duly elected and took the onths and his seat for the county. It was hard on Sackville Scatterbrain to lose his seat in the house and a peerage, nearly at once; but the latter loss threw the former so far into the felt shade, that he scarcely he could console himself with having buttered his crumbs pretty well in the marriage-market; and, with a rich wife, retired from senatorial drudgery to private re-

· If not this identical answer, something like it was given on a disputed Irish election, before a Committee of the House of Commons.

pose, which was much more congenial to his easy tem

But while the Squire's happy family circle was rejoicing in his triumph—while he was invited to the Speaker's dinners, and the ladies were looking forward to tickets for "the lantern," their pleasure was suddenly dashed by fatal news from Ireland.

A serious accident had befallen Major Dawson-so serious, that his life was despaired of; and an immediate return to Ireland by all who were interested in his life was the consequence.

Though the suddenness of this painful event shocked his family, the act which caused it did not surprise them; for it was one against which Major Dawson had been repeatedly cautioned, involving a danger he had been affectionately requested not to tempt; but the habitual | present. obstinacy of his nature prevailed, and he persisted in doing that which his son-and his daughters-and friends | ward. -prophesied would kill him some time or other, and did, at last. The Major had three little iron guns, mounted on carriages, on a terrace in front of his house; and it was his wont to fire a salute on certain festival days from these guns, which, from age and exposure to the weather, became dangerous to use. It was in vain that this danger was represented to him. He would reply with his accustomed "Pooh! pooh! I have been firing these guns for forty years, and they won't do me any harm now,"

This was the prime fault of the Major's character. Time and circumstances were never taken into account by him; what was done once, might be done alwaysought to be done always. The bare thought of change of any sort, to him, was unbearable; and whether it was a rotten old law or a rotten old gun, he would charge both up to the muzzle and fire away, regardless of consequences. The result was, that on a certain festival his favorite gun burst in discharging; and the last mortal act of which the Major was conscious, was that of putting the port-fire to the touchhole, for a heavy splinter of iron struck him on the head, and though he lived for some days afterwards, he was insensible. Before his children arrived he was no more; and the only duty left them to perform was the melancholy one of ordering his

The obsequies of the old Major were honored by a large and distinguished attendance from all parts of the country; and amongst those who bore the pall was Edward O'Connor, who had the melancholy gratification of testifying his respect beside the grave of Fanny's father, though the severe old man had banished him from his presence during his lifetime.

But now all obstacle to the union of Edward and Fanny was removed; and after the lapse of a few days had softened the bitter grief which this sudden bereavement of her father had produced, Edward received a note from Dick, inviting him to the manor-house, where all would be glad to see him. In a few minutes after the receipt of that note Edward was in his saddle, and swiftly leaving the miles behind him till, from the top of a rising ground, the roof of the manor-house appeared above the trees in which it was embosomed. He had not till then slackened his speed; but now drawing rein, he proceeded at a slower space towards the house he had not entered for some years, and the sight of which awakened such varied emotions.

To return after long years of painful absence to some place which has been the scene of our former joys, and whence the force of circumstances, and not choice, has driven us, is oppressive to the heart. There is a mixed sense of regret and rejoicing, which struggle for predominance; we rejoice that our term of exile has expired, but we regret the years which that exile has deducted from the brief amount of human life, never to be recalled, and therefore as so much lost to us. We think of the wrong or the caprice of which we have been the victime, and thoughts will stray across the most confiding hearts, if friends shall meet as fondly as they parted; or if time, while impressing deeper marks upon the outward form, may have obliterated some impressions within. Who has returned after years of absence, however assured of the unflinching fidelity of the love he left behind, without saying to himself, in the pardonable yearning of affection, "Shall I meet smiles as bright as those pale of all earthly enjoyments!"

Such thoughts crowded on Edward as he approached the house. There was not a lane, or tree, or hedge, by the way, that had not for him its association. He reached the avenue gate; as he flung it open he remembered the last time he passed it; Fanny had then leaned on his arm. He felt himself so much excited, that, instead of riding up to the house, he took the private path to the stables. and, throwing down the reins to a boy, he turned into a shrubbery and endeavored to recover his selfcommand before he should present himself. As he emerged from the sheltered path and turned into a walk which led to the garden, a small conservatory was opened to his view, awaking fresh sensations. It was in that very place he had first ventured to declare his love to Fanny. There she heard and frowned not; there, where nature's choicest sweets were exhaling, he had first pressed her to his heart, and thought the balmy sweetness of her lips beyond them all. He hurried forward in the enthusiasm the recollection recalled, to enter that spot consecrated in his memory; but on arriving at the door, he suddenly stopped, for he saw Fanny within. She was plucking a geranium—the flower she had been plucking some years before, when Edward said he loved her. She all that morning, had been under the influence of feelings similar to Edward's; had felt the same yearnings-the same tender doubts-the same fond solicitude that he should be the same Edward from whom she parted. But she thought of more than this; with the exquisitely delicate contrivance belonging to woman's nature. she wished to give him a signal of her fond recollection. and was plucking the flower she gathered when he declared his love, to place on her bosom when they should meet. Edward felt the meaning of her action, as the graceful hand broke the flower from its stem. He would have rushed towards her at once, but that the deep mourning in which she was arrayed seemed to command a gentler approach; for grief commands respect. He advanced softly—she heard a gentle step behind her-turned -uttered a faint exclamation of joy, and sank into his arms! In a few moments she recovered her consciousness, and opening her sweet eyes upon him, breathed softly, "dear Edward!"-and the lips which, in two words, had expressed so much, were impressed with a fervent kiss in the blessed consciousness of possession, on that very spot where the first timid and doubting word of love had been spoken. In that moment he was rewarded for all his years of absence and anxiety. His heart was satisfied; he felt he was dear as ever to the woman he idolised, and the short and hurried beating of both their hearts told more than words could express. Words!-what were words to them?—thought was too swift for their use, and feeling too strong for their utterance; but they drank from each other's eyes large draughts of delight, and, in the silent pressure of each other's welcoming embrace, felt how truly they loved each other.

He led her gently from the conservatory, and they exchanged words of affection "soft and low," as they sauntered through the wooded path which surrounded the house. That live-long day they wandered up and down together, repeating again and again the anxious yearnings which occupied their years of separation, yet asking each other was not all more than repaid by the gladness of the

"Yet how painful has been the past!" exclaimed Ed-

"But now /" said Fanny, with a gentle pressure of her tiny hand on Edward's arm, and looking up to him with her bright eyes-" but now /"

"True, darling!" he cried; "'tis ungrateful to think of the past while enjoying such a present and with such . future before me. Bless that cheerful heart, and those hope-inspiring glances! Oh, Fanny! in the wilderness of life there are springs and palmtrees—you are both to me; and heaven has set its own mark upon you in those laughing blue eyes which might set despair at defiance."

"Poetical as ever, Edward!" said Fanny, laughing. "Sit down, dearest, for a moment, on this old tree, beside me; 'tis not the first time I have strung rhymes in your presence and your praise." He took a small notebook from his pocket, and Fanny looked on smilingly as Edward's pencil rapidly ran over the leaf and traced the lover's tribute to his mistress.

THE SUNSHINE IN YOU.

"It is sweet when we look round the wide world" waste To know that the desert bestows

The palms where the weary heart may rest, The spring that in purity flows. And where have I found In this wilderness round That spring and that shelter so true; Unfailing in need, And my own, indeed?— Oh! dearest, I've found it in you!

"And, oh when the cloud of some darkening hour O'er shadows the soul with its gloom, Then where is the light of the vestal pow'r, The lamp of pale Hope to illume? Oh! the light ever lies

In those bright fond eyes, Where Heaven has impress'd its own blue As a seal from the skies As my heart relies On that gift of its sunshine in you!"

Fanny liked the lines of course. "Dearest," she said "may I always prove sunshine to you! Is it not a strange coincidence that these lines exactly fit a little air which occurred to me some time ago?"

"'Tis odd," said Edward; "sing to me, darling." Fanny took the verses from his hand, and sung them to her own measure. Oh, happy triumph of the poeti-to hear his verses wedded to sweet sounds, and warbled by the woman he loves! Edward caught up the strain, adding his voice to hers in harmony, and thus they sauntered homeward, trolling their ready-made duet together. There were not two happier hearts in the world that day than those of Fanny Dawson and Edward O'Connor.

CHAPTER L.

Respect for the memory of Major Dawson of course prevented the immediate marriage of Edward and Fauny, but the winter months passed cheerfully away in looking forward to the following autumn which should withness the completion of their happiness. Though Edward was that used to welcome me? Shall I be pressed as fondly thus tempted by the society of the one he loved best in the with the arms whose encompassment were to me the world, it did not make him neglect the duties he had undertaken in behalf of Gustavus. Not only did he prosecute his reading with him regularly, but he took no smal! pains in looking after the involved affairs of the family, and strove to make satisfactory arrangements with those whose claims were gnawing away the estate to nothing. Though the years of Gusty's minority were but few, stil' they would give the estate some breathing time; and creditors, seeing the minor backed by a man of character and convinced a sincere desire existed to relieve the estate of its encumbrances and pay all just claims, presented a less threatening front than hitherto, and listened readily to such terms of accommodation as were proposed to them. Uncle Robert (for the breaking of whose neck Ratty's pious aspirations had been raised) behaved very well on the occasion. A loan from him, and a partial sale of some of the acres, stopped the mouths of the greedy wolves who fatten on men's ruin, and time and economy were looked forward to for the discharge of all other debte. Uncle Robert, having so far acted the friend, was considered entitled to have a partial voice in the ordering of things at the Hall; and having a notion that an English accent was genteel, he desired that Gusty and Ratty should pass a year under the roof of a clergyman in England, who received a limited number of young gentlemen for the completion of their education. Gustavus would much rather have remained near Edward O'Connor, who had already done so much for him; but Edward, though he regretted parting with Gustavus, recommended him to accede to his uncle's wishes, though he did not see the necessity of any Irish gentleman being ashamed of his accent.

The visit to England, however, was postponed till the spring, and the winter months were used by Gustavus in availing himself as much as he could of Edward's assist ance in putting him through his classics, his pride prompt ing him to present himself creditably to the English clergyman.

It was in vain to plead such pride to Ratty, who paid more attention to shooting than his lessons. His mother strove to persuade-Ratty was deaf. His "gran" strove to bribe—Ratty was incorruptible. Gusty argued—Ratty answered after his own fashion.

"Why won't you learn even a little?" "I'm to go to that 'English fellow' in spring, and I shall have no fun then, so I'm making good use of my time now."

shamefully ignorant?" "Brother!-the less I know, the more the English for

"Do you call it good use, to be so dreadfully idle and will have to teach me, and Uncle Bob will have more Ath for his money; " and when Ratty would whistle a Aig, fling a fowling-piece over his shoulder, and shout Ponth! Ponto! Ponto! "as he traversed the stable-yard; the delighted pointer would come bounding at the call, and, after circling round his young master with agile grace and yelps of glee at the sight of the gun, dash forward to the well-known "bottoms" in eager expectancy of ducks and snipe.

How fared it all this time with the Lord of Scatterbrain? He became established, for the present, in a house that had been a long time to let in the neighborhood, and his mother was placed at the head of it, and Oonah still remained under his protection, though the daily sight of the girl added to Andy's grief at the desperate plight in which his ill-starred marriage placed him, to say nothing of the constant annoyance of his mother's growling at him for his making "such a judy of himself!" for the dowager Lady Scatterbrain could not get rid of her vocabulary at once. Andy's only resource under these circumstances was to mount his horse and fly.

As for the dowager Lady Scatterbrain, she had a carrisge with "a picture" on it, as she called the coat of arras, and was fond of driving past the houses of people who had been uncivil to her. Against Mrs. Casey (the renowned Matty Dwyer) she entertained an especial spite, in consideration of her treatment of her beautiful bog and her own pair of black eyes; so she determined to "pay her off" in her own way, and stopping one day at the hole in the hedge which served for entrance to the estate of the "three-cornered field," she sent the footman in to say the dowjer Lady Scatterbreen wanted to speak with "Casey's wife."

When the servant, according to instructions, delivered this message, he was sent back with the answer, "that if were never seen there before. The magistrates were Andy back to his propriety, and, as well as his excite. any lady wanted to see Casey's wife, 'Casey's wife,' was active in the affair, and a reward was immediately offered ment would permit, he told them the cause of his extrav-at home." "Oh, go back, and tell the poor woman I don't want to bring her to the door of my carriage, if it's inconvaynient. I only wished to give her a little help; and tell her if she sends up eggs to the big house, Lady Scatterbreen will pay her for them." When the servant delivered this message, Matty grew outrageous at the means "my lady" took of crowing over her, and rushing to the door, with her face flushed with rage, roared out, "Tell the old baggage I want none of her custom; let her lay eggs for herself." The servant staggered back in amaze; and Matty, feeling he would not deliver her message, ran to the hole in the hedge and repeated her answer to my lady herself, with a great deal more which need not be recorded. Sufnce it to say, my lady thought it necessary to pull up the glass, against which Matty threw a handful of mud; the servant jumped up on his perch behind the carriage, which was rapidly driven away by the coachman, but not so fast that Matty could not, by dint of running, keep it "within range" for some seconds, during which time she contrived to pelt both coachman and footman with mud, and leave her mark on their new livery. This was a salu tary warning to the old woman, who was more cautious in her demonstrations of grandeur for the future. If she was stinted in the enjoyment of her new-born dignity abroad, she could indulge it at home without let or hindrance, and to this end asked Andy to let her have a hundred pounds, in one-pound notes, for a particular purpose. What this purpose was no one was told or could guess, but for a good while after she used to be closeted by herself for several hours during the day.

Andy had his hours of retirement also, for with praiseworthy industry he strove hard, poor fellow, to lift himself above the state of ignorance, and had daily attendance from the parish schoolmaster. The mysteries of "pothooks and hangers" and A B C weighed heavily on the nobleman's mind, which must have sunk under the burden of scholarship and penmanship, but for the other "ship"—the horsemanship—which was Andy's daily selfestablished reward for his perseverance in his lessons, Besides he really could ride; and as it was the only accomplishment of which he was master, it was no wonder he enjoyed the display of it; and, to say the truth, he did, and that on a first-rate horse too. Having appointed Murtough Murphy his law-agent, he often rode over to the dying man, went himself in search of Father Blake, was always glad to see his "noble friend." The high road did not suit Andy's notion of things; he preferred the variety, shortness, and diversion of going across the country on these occasions; and in one of these excur-Cons, in the most secluded portion of his ride, which unavoidably lay through some quarries and deep broken ground, he met "Ragged Nance," who held up her finger as he approached the gorge of this lonely dell, in token that she would speak with him. Andy pulled up.

"Long life to you, my lord," said Nance, dropping a deep curtsey, "and sure I always liked you since the hight you was so bowld for the sake of the poor girl-the young lady, I mane, now, God bless her-and I just wish to tell you, my lord, that I think you might as well not be going these lonely ways, for I see them hanging about here betimes, that maybe it would not be good for your health to meet; and sure, my lord, it would be a hard case if you were killed now, havin' the luck of the sick calf that lived all the winther and died in the summer."

"Is it that big blackguard, Shan More, you mane?"

said Andy. "No less," said Nance-growing deadly pale as she cast a piercing glance into the dell, and cried, in low, hurmed tone-"Talk of the divil-and there he is-I see him peep out from behind a rock."

"He's running this way," said Andy. "Then you run the other way," said Nance; "look there- I seen him strive to hide a blunderbus under his coat-Gallop off, for the love o' God! or there'll be murther."

"Maybe there will be that same," said Andy, "if I leave you here, and he suspects you to gave me the hard Word naf

"Never mind me," said Nance, "save yourself-see, he's moving fast, he'll be near enough to you soon to fire. "

"Get up behind me," said Andy; "I won't leave you Agre, "

"Run, I tell you."

" I won't." "God bless you, then," said the woman, as Andy held his hand and gripped hers firmly.

"Put your foot on mine," said Andy. The woman obeyed, and was soon seated behind our ero, gripping him fast by the waist, while he pushed his some to a fast canter. "Hold hard now," said Andy, "for there's a stiff jump here." As he approached the ditch of which he and it was deemed advisable to knock him on the hard, spoke, two men sprang up from it, and one fired, as and shoot my lord, which they thought would prevent all Andy cleared the leap in good style, Nance holding on chance of the invalidity of the marriage being degallantly. The horse was not many strokes on the covered, and secure the future payment of the main opposite side, when another shot was fired in their rear, followed by a scream from the woman. To Andy's inquiry, if she was "kilt," she replied in the negative, but said "they hurt her sore," and she was " bleeding a power;" but that she could still hold on, however, and urged him to speed. The clearance of one or two more leaps gave her grievous pain; but a large common soon opened before them, which was skirted by a road leading directly to a farmhouse, where Andy left the wounded woman, and then galloped off for medical aid; this soon arrived, and the wound was found not to be dangerous, though painful. The bullet had struck and pierced a tin vessel of a bottle form, in which Nance carried the liquid gratuities of the charitable, and this not only deadened the force of the ball, but glanced it also; and the escapement of the butter-milk, which the vessel contained, Nance had mistaken for the effusion of her own blood. It was a clear case, however, that if Nance had not been sitting behind Andy, Lord Scatterbrain would have been a dead man, so that his gratitude and gallantry towards the poor beggar woman proved the means of preserving his own life.

CHAPTER LI.

The news of the attack on Lord Scatterbrain ran over the country like wildfire, and his conduct throughout the affair raised his character wonderfully in the opinion of all classes. Many who had hitherto held aloof from the mushroom lord, came forward to recognise the manly fellow, and cards were left at "the big house," which for the apprehension of the offenders; but before any agant joy. His wonder and delight were shared by his active steps could be taken by the authorities, Andy, immediately after the attack, collected a few stout fellows himself, and knowing where the den of Shan and his miscreants lay, he set off at the head of his party to try if he could not secure them himself; but before he did this, he despatched a vehicle to the farm-house, where poor Narce lay wounded, with orders that she should be removed to his own house, the doctor having said that the transit would not be injurious.

A short time served to bring Andy and his followers to the private still, where a little looking about enabled them to discover the entrance, which was covered by some large stones, and a bunch of furze placed as a mask to the opening. It was clear that it was impossible for any persons inside to have thus covered the entrance, and it suggested the possibility that some of its usual inmates were then absent. Nevertheless, having such desperate characters to deal with, it was a service of danger to be leader in the descent to the cavern when the opening was cleared; but Andy was the first to enter, which he did boldly, only desiring his attendants to follow him quickly, and give him support in case of resistance. A lantern had been provided, Andy knowing the darkness of the den; and the party was thereby enabled to explore with celerity and certainty the hidden haunt of the desperadoes. The ashes of the fire were yet warm, but no bed, discovered a man lying in a seemingly helpless state, breathing with difficulty, and the straw about him dabbled with blood. On attempting to lift him, the wretch groaned heavily and muttered, "D-n you, let me alone-you've done for me-I'm dying."

The man was gently carried from the cave to the open and the ladder, drawn up from the cave and overlaid nearest house, whence Andy ordered a mounted messenger to hurry for a doctor. The man seemed to hear what was going forward, for he faintly muttered, "the priestthe priest."

Andy, anxious to procure this most essential comfort to detour to obtain the presence of Squire Egan, while Father Blake pushed directly onward upon his ghostly mission,

Andy and the Squire arrived soon after the priest had administered spiritual comfort to the sufferer, who still retained sufficient strength to make his depositions before the Squire, the purport of which turned out to be of the utmost importance to Andy. This man, it appeared, was the husband of Bridget, who had returned from transportation, and sought his wife and her dear brother, and his former lawless associates, on reaching Ireland. On finding Bridget had married again. his anger at her infidelity was endeavored to be appeased by the representations made to him that it was a " good job," inasmuch as "the lord" had been screwed out of a good sum of money by way of separate maintainance, and that he would share the advantage of that. When matters were more explained, however, and the convict found this money was divided among so many, who all claimed right of share in the plunder, his discontent returned. In the first place, the pettifogger made a large haul for his services. Shan More swore it was hard for a woman's own brother was not to be the better for her luck; and Larry Logan claimed hush-money, for he could prove Bridget's marriage, and so upset their scheme of plunder. The convict maintained his claim as husband was stronger than any; but this, all the others declared, was an outlandish notion he brought back with him from foreign parts, and did not prevail in their code of laws by any manner o'means, and even went so far as to say they thought it hard, after they had "done the job," that he was to come in and lessen their profit, which he would. as they were willing to give an even share of the spoil: and after that, he must be the most discontented villian in the world if he was not pleased.

The convict feigned contentment, but meditated at once revenge against his wife and the gang, and separate profit for himself. He thouggt he might stipulate for a good round sum from Lord Scatterbrain, as he could prove him free of his supposed matrimonial engagement. and inwardly resolved he would soon pay a visit to his lordship. But his intentions were suspected by the gang. and a strict watch kept upon him; and though his dissimulation and contrivance were of no inferior order, Larry in having been so near Lord Scatterbrain's dwelling, that the woman ransacked his pockets; but they contained longer to be trusted to their new confederate's keeping; treachery to his confederates in the folds of his new tenance.

How promptly the murderous determination was act if upon, the preceding events prove. Andy's courage in the first part of the affair saved his life; his promptness a afterwards seeking to secure the offenders led to the inportant discovery he had just made; and as the convict's depositions could be satisfactorily backed by proofs which he showed the means of obtaining, Andy was congratulated heartily by the Squire and Father Blate, and rode home in almost delirious delight at the prospect of making Oonah his wife. On reaching the stables, he threw himself from his saddle, let the horse make his own way to his stall, dashed through the back hall, and nearly broke his neck in tumbling up-stairs, burst open the drawingroom door, and made a rush upon Conah, whom he hugged and kissed most outrageously, admist exclamations of the wildest affection.

Oonah, half strangled and struggling for breath, at last freed herself from his embraces, and asked him, angrily, what he was about-in which inquiry she was backed by his mother.

Andy answered by capering round the room, shouting, "Hurroo! I'm not married at all-hurroo!" He turned over the chairs, upset the tables, threw the mantelpiece ornaments into the fire, seized the poker and tongs, and banged them together as he continued dancing and shout

Oonah and his mother stood gazing at his antics in trembling amazement, till at last the old woman exclaimed, "Holy Vargin! he's gone mad!" whereupon she and her niece set up a violent screaming, which called mother and the blushing Oonah, who did not strugg e so hard in Andy's embrace on his making a second veher lent demonstration of his love for her.

"Let me send for Father Blake, my jewel," said Ardy, "and I'll marry you at once."

His mother reminded him he must first have his present marriage proved invalid. Andy uttered several pieces of original eloquence on "the law's delay." "Well, anyhow," said he, "I'll drink your health, my darling girl, this day, as Lady Scatterbrain - for you must consider yourself as sitch."

"Behave yourself, my lord," said Oonah, archly. "Bother!" cried Andy, snatching another kiss. "Hillo!" cried Dick Dawson, entering at the moment, and seeing the romping-match. "You're losing no time, I see, Andy."

Oonah was running from the room, laughing and blushing, when Dick interposed, and cried, "Ah, don't go, 'my lady,' that is to be.

Oonah slapped down the hand that barred her progress, exclaiming, "You're just as bad as he is, Mister Daw son!" and ran away.

Dick had ridden over, on hearing the news, to congratulate Andy, and consented to remain and dine with him. Oonah had rather, after what had taken place, he had not been there, for Dick backed Andy in his tormentone was to be seen, till Andy, drawing the screen of the | ing the girl, and joined heartily in drinking to Andy' toast, which, according to promise, he gave to the health of the future Lady Scatte brain.

It was impossible to repress Andy's wild delight; and in the excitement of the hour he tossed off bumper after bumper to all sorts of love-making toasts, till he was quite overcome by his potations, and fit for no place but bed. air, which seemed slightly to revive him. His eyes To this last retreat of "the glorious" he was requested opened heavily, but closed again; yet still he breathed, to retire, and, after much conxing, consented. He stag-His wounds were staunched as well as the limited gered over to the window-curtain, which he mistook for means and knowledge of the parties present allowed; that of the bed; in vain they wanted to lead him elsewhere-he would sleep in no other bed but that-and, with tufts of heather, served to bear the sufferer to the backing out at the window-pane, he made a smash, of which he seemed sensible, for he said it wasn't a fair trick to put pins in the bed. "I know it was Oonah did that!-hip!-ha! ha! Lady Scatterbrain!-never mind! -hip!-I'll have my revenge on you yet!"

They could not get him up-stairs, so his mother suggested he should sleep in her room, which was on the the town to talk with him, and as Murtough could have whom he found at home, and who suggested that a magis- same floor, for that night, and at last he was got into the some fun and thirteen and fourpence also per visit, he trate might be also useful upon the occasion; and as apartment. There he was assisted to disrobe, as he stood Merryvale lay not much out of the way, Andy made a swaying about at a dressing table. Chancing to lay his hands on a pill-box, he mistook it for his watch.

"Stop-stop!" he stammered forth-"I must wind my watch;" and sulting the action to the word, he began twisting about the pill-box, the lid of which came off and the pills fell about the floor. "Oh, murder I" said Lord Scatterbrain, "the works of my watch are fallin' about the flure-pick them up-pick them up-pick them up -" He could speak no more, and becoming quite incapable of voluntary action, was undressed and put to bed, the last sound which escaped him being a faint muttering-pick them up."

CHAPTER THE LAST. THE day following the eventful one just recorded, the miserable convict breathed his last. A printed notice was posted in all the adjacent villages, offering a reward for the apprehension of Shan More and "other persons unknown," for their murderous assault; and a small reward was promised for such "private information as might lead to the apprehension of the aforesaid," &c., &c. Larry Hogan at once came forward and put the authorities on the scent, but still Shan and his accomplices remained undiscovered. Larry's information on another subject, however, was more effective. He gave his own testimony to the previous marriage of Bridget, and pointed out the means of obtaining more, so that, ere long, Lord Scatterbrain was a "free man." Though the depositions of the murdered man did not directly implicate Larry in the murderous attack, still it showed that he had participated in much of their viiliany; but, as in difficult cases, we must put up with bad instruments to reach the ends of justice, so this rascal was useful for his evidence and private information, and got his re ward.

But he got his reward in more ways than one. He knew that he dare not longer remain in the country after what had taken place, and set off directly for Dublin by the mail, intending to proceed to England; but England he never reached. As he was proceeding down the Custom-house quay in the dusk of the evening, to get on ship-board, his arms were suddenly seized and drawn behind him by a powerful grasp, while a woman in front drew a handkerchief across his wouth, and stifled his Hogan was his overmatch, and the convict was detected attempted cries. His bundle was dragged from him, and they feared their secret, if not already revealed, was no but a few shillings, Larry having hidden the wages of his herce wrench was made by the woman, when her attempts on the pockets proved worthless; but the handkerchief was knotted so tightly that she could not disengage it. The approach of some passengers along the quay alarmed the assailants of Larry, who, ere the iron grip released him, heard a deep curse in his ear growled by a voice he well knew, and then he felt himself hurled with gigantic force from the quay wall. Before the base, cheating, faithless scoundrel could make one exclamation, he was plunged into the Liffey-even before one mental aspiration for mercy, he was in the throes of suffocation! The heavy splash in the water caught the attention of those whose approach had alarmed the murderers, and seeing a man and woman running, a pursuit commenced, which ended by Newgate having two fresh tenants the next day.

And so farewell to the entire of the abominable crew, whose evil doings and merited fates have only been recorded when it became necessary to our story. It is better to leave the debased and the profligate in oblivion than drag their doings before the day! and it is with happy consciousuess an Irishman may assert, that there is plenty of subject afforded by Irish character and Irish life honorable to the land, pleasing to the narrator, and sufficiently attractive to the reader, without the unwholesome exaggerations of crime which too often disfigure the fictions which pass under the title of "Irish," alike offengive to truth as to taste-alike injurious both for private and public considerations.

It was in the following autumn that a particular chariot drove up to the door of the Victoria Hotel, on the shore of Killarney lake. A young man of elegant bearing handed a very charming young lady from the chariot; and that kindest and most accommodating of hostesses, Mrs. | still lives. F---, welcomed the fresh arrival with her good-humored and smiling face.

Why, amidst the crowd of arrivals at the Victoria, one chariot should be remarkable beyond another, arose from its quiet elegance, which might strike even a casual observer; but the intelligent Mrs. F--- saw with half an eye the owners must be high-bred people. To the apartments already engaged for them they were shown; but few minutes were lost within doors where such matchless natural beauty tempted them without. A boat was immediately ordered, and then the newly arrived visitors were soon on the lake. The boatmen had already worked hard that day, having pulled one party completely round the lakes -no trifling task; but the hardy fellows again bent to their oars, and made the sleeping waters wake in golden flashes to the sunset, till told they need not pull so hard.

"Faith, then, we'll plaze you, sir," said the strcke-oarsman, with a grin, "for we have had quite enough of it today."

"Do you not think, Fanny," said Edward O'Connor, for it was he who spoke to his bride, "Do you not think lis more in unison with the tranquil hour and the coming shadows, to glide softly over the lulled waters?"

"Yes," she replied, "it seems almost sacrilege to disarb this heavenly repose by the slightest dip of the oarsee how perfectly that lovely island is reflected."

"That is Innisfallin, my lady," said the boatman, hearing her allude to the island, "where the hermitage is." As he spoke, a gleam of light sparkled on the island, which was reflected on the water. "One might think the hermit was there, too," said

Fanny "and had just lighted a lamp for his vigils." "That's the light of the guide that shows the place to the quality, my lady, and lives on the island always in a corner of the ould ruin. And, indeed, if you'd like to see the island this evening, there's time enough, and 'twould be so much saved out of to-morrow."

The boatman's advice was acted upon, and as they glided towards the island, Fanny and Edward gazed delightedly on the towering summits of Magillicuddy's reeks, whose spiral pinnacles and graceful declivities told out sharply against the golden sky behind them, which, being perfectly reflected in the calm lake, gave a grand chain of mountain the appearance of being suspended in glowing heather, for the lake was one bright amber sheet of light below, and the mountains one massive barrier of shade, till they cut against the light above. The boat touched the shore of Innisfallin, and the delighted pair of visitants hurried to its western point to catch the sunset, lighting with its glory the matchless foliage of this enchanting spot, where every form of grace exhaustless nature can display is lavished on the arborial richness of the scene, which, in its unequalled luxuriance gives to a fanciful beholder the idea that the trees themselves have a conscious pleasure in growing there. Oh! what a witching spot is Innisfallin!

Edward had never seen anything so beautiful in his life; and with the woman he adored resting on his arm, he quoted the lines which Moore has applied to the Vale of Cashmere, as he asked Fanny would she not like to live there.

"Would you? said Fanny. Edward answered-

"If woman can make the worst wilderness dear, Think-think what a heaven she must make of Cashmere."

They lingered on the island till the moon arose, and hen re-embarked. The silvery light exhibited the lake ander another aspect, and the dimly discovered form of the lofty hills rose one above another, tier upon tier. circling the waters in their shadowy frame, the beauty of the scene reached a point of sublimity which might be called holy. As they returned towards the shelving etrand, a long row of peeled branches, standing upright in the water, attracted Fanny's attention, and she asked their use.

"All the use in life, my lady," said the boatman, "for without the same branches, maybe it's not home to-night you'd yet."

On Fanny inquiring further the meaning of the boatman's answer, she learned that the sticks were placed there to indicate the only channel which permitted a boat to approach the shore on that side of the take, where the water was shoal, while in other parts, the depth had never been fathomed.

morning, and Edward and Fanny were wakened from their slumbers by the tones of the bugle; a soft Irish melody being breathed by Spillan, followed by a more sportive one from the other minstrel of the lake, Ganzy.

To pluck this from his throat, many a wood, which, though tinged by the declining year, had scarcely shed one leafy honor, The day was glorious, and the favouring breeze enabled the boat to career across the sparkling lake under canvas, till the overhanging hills of the opposite side robbed them of their ærial wings, and the sail being struck the boatmen bent to their oars. As they passed under a promintory, clothed from the waters edge to its topmost ridge with the most luxuriant vegetation, it was pointed out to the lady as "the minis-

> "Tis a strange name," said Fanny. "Do you know why it is called so?"

> "Faix, I dunna, my lady-barrin' that it is the best covered back in the country. But here we come to the aichos," said he, resting on his oars. The example was followed by his fellows, and the bugler, lifting his instrument to his lips, gave one long well-sustained blast. It rang across the waters gallantly. It returned in a few seconds with such unearthly sweetness, as though the spirit of the departed sound had become heavenly, and revisited the place where it had expired.

Fanny and Edward listened breathlessly. The bugle gave out its notes again in the well-known

"call," and as sweetly as before the notes were returned distinctly.

And now a soft and slow and simple melody stole from the exquisitely played bugle, and phrase after phrase was echoed from the responding hills. How many an emotion stirred within Edward's breast, as the melting music fell upon his ear! in the midst of matchless beauties he heard the matchless strains of his native land, and the echoes of her old hills responding to the triumphs of her old bards. The air, too, bore with it historic associations; -it told a tale of wrong and of suffering. The wrong has ceased, the suffering is past, but the air which records them

"Oh! triumph of the minstrel!" exclaimed Edward in delight. "The tyrant crumbles in his coffin, while the song of the bard survives! The memory of a sceptered ruflian is endlessly branded by a simple strain, while many of the elaborate chronicles of his evil life have passed away and are mouldering like himself."

Scarcely had the echoes of this exquisite air died away, when the entrancement it carried was rudely broken by one of the vulgarest tunes being brayed from a bugle in a boat which was seen rounding the headland of the wooded promintory.

Edward and Fanny writhed, and put their hands to their ears. "Give way, boys!" said Edward; "for pity's sake get away from these barbarians. Give way!" Away sprang the boat. To the boatman's inquiry whether they should stop at "Lady Kenmare's Cottage," Fanny said "no," when she found on inquiry it was a particularly "show-place," being certain the vulgar party following would stop there, and therefore time might be gained in getting away from such disagreeable followers.

Dinas Island, fringed with its lovely woods, excited their admiration, as they passed underneath its shadows, and turned into Turk Lake: here the labyrinthine nature of the channels through which they had been winding was changed for a circular expanse of water, over which the lofty mountain, whence it takes its name, towers in all its wild beauty of wood, and rock, and heath.

At a certain part of the lake, the boatmen, without any visible cause, rested on their oars. On Edward asking them why they did not pull, he received this touching answer:-

"Sure, your honor would not have us disturb Ned Macarthy's grave!"

"Then a boatman was drowned here, I suppose?" said

Edward. "Yes, your honor." The boatman then told how the accident occurred "one day when there was a stag-hunt on the lake;" but as the anecdote struck Edward so forcibly that he afterwards recorded it in verse, we will give the story after his fashion:

MACARTHY'S GRAVE.

The breeze was fresh, the morn was fair, The stag had left his dewy lair; To cheering horn and baying tongue, Killarney's echoes sweetly rung. With sweeping oar and bending mast, The eager chase was following fast; When one light skiff a maiden steer'd Beneath the deep wave disappear'd: Wild shouts of terror wildly ring, A boatman brave, with gallant spring And dauntless arm, the lady bore; But he who saved—was seen no more!

Where weeping birches wildly wave. There boatmen show their brother's grave: And while they tell the name he bore, Suspended hangs the lifted oar; The silent drops they idly shed Seem like tears to gallant Ned; And while gently gliding by, The tale is told with moisten'd eye, No ripple on the slumb'ring lake Unhallow'd oar doth ever make; All undisturb'd, the placid wave Flows gently o'er Macarthy's grave.

Winding backwards through the channels which lead the explorers of this scene of nature's enchantment from the lower to the upper lake, the surpassing beauty of the "Eagle's nest" burst on their view; and as they hovered | When under its stupendous crags, clustering with all variety of verdure, the bugle and the cannon awoke the almost endless reverberation of sound which is engendered here. Passing onward, a sudden change is wrought; the soft beauty melts gradually away, and the scene hardens into frowning rocks and steep acclivities, making a befitting vestibule to the bold and bleak precipices of "The Reeks," which form the western barrier of this upper lake, whose savage grandeur is rendered more striking by the scenes of fairy-like beauty left behind. But even here, in the midst of the mightiest desolation, the vegeta-An early excursion on the water was planned for the tive vigor of the numerous islands proves the wondrous productiveness of the soil in these regions.

On their return, a great commotion was observable as they approached the rapids formed by the descending waters of the upper lake to the lower, and they were The lake now appeared under another aspect—the hailed and warned by some of the peasants from the morning sun and morning breeze were upon it, and the shore that they must not attempt the rapids at present, and blimity with which the shades of evening had invested a boat, which had just been upset, lay athwart the pasmountains was changed to that of the most varied sage. On hearing this, Edward and Fanny landed upon the falls, and walked toward the old bridge, where all was bustle and confusion, as the dripping passengers were dragged safely to shore from the ca, which had been upset by the principal gentlem. party, whose vulgar trumpetings had so disturbed light of Edward and Fanny, who soon recognized renowned Andy as the instigator of the bad music a. the cause of the accident. Yes, Lord Scatterbrain, true to his original practice, was author of all.

Nevertheless, he and his party soused over head and ears as they were, took the thing in good humor, which was unbroken even by the irrepressible laughter which escaped from Edward and Fanny, as they approached and kindly offered assistance. An immediate removal to the neighboring cottage on Dinas Island was recommended. particularly as Lady Scatterbrain was in a delicate situation, as well, indeed, as Mrs. Durfy, who, with he, dear Tom, had joined Lord Scatterbrain's party of pleasure.

On reaching the cottage, sufficient change of clothes was obtained to prevent evil consequences from the ducking. This, under ordinary circumstances, might not have been easy for so many; but, fortunately, Lord Scatterbrain had ordered a complete dinner from the hotel to be served in the cottage, and some of the assistants from the Victoria, who were necessarily present, helped to dress more than the dinner. What between cookmaids and waiters, the care-taker of the cottage and the boatman, bodies and skirts, jackets and other conveniences, enabled the party to sit down to dinner in company, until fire could mend the mistake of his Lordship. Edward and Fanny courteously joined the party; and the honor of their company was sensibly felt by Andy and Oonah, who would have borne a ducking a day for the honor of having Fanny and Edward as their guests. Oonah was by nature a nice creature, and adapted herself to her elevated position with a modest ease that was surprising. Even Andy was by this time able to conduct himself tolerably well at table-only on that particular day he did make a mistake: for when salmon (which is served at Killarney in all sorts of variety) made its appearance for the first time in the novel form "en papillote," Andy ate paper and all. He refused a second cutlet, however, saying he "thought the skin tough." The party, however, passed of mirthfully, the very accident helping the fun: for, instead of any one being called by name, the "lady in the jacket," or the "gentleman in the bedgown," were the terms of address; and, after a merrily spent evening, the beds of the Victoria gave sleep and pleasing dreams to the sojourners of Killarney.

Kind reader! the shortening space we have prescribed to our volume warns us we must draw our story to an end. Nine months after this Killarney excursion, Lord Scatter brain met Dick Dawson near Mount Eskar, where Lord Scatterbrain had ridden to make certain inquiries about Mrs. O'Connor's health. Dick wore a smiling countenance, and to Andy's inquiry answered, "All right, and doing as well as can be expected." Lord Scatterbrain, wishing to know whether it was a boy or a girl, made the inquiry in the true spirit of Andyism-" Tell me, Misther Dawson, are you an uncle or an aunt ?"

Andy's mother died soon after of the cold caught by her ducking. On her death-bed she called Oonah to her and said "I leave you this quilt, alanna-'tis worth more than it appears. The hundred pound notes Andy gave me ! quilted into the lining, so that if I lived poor all my life till lately, I died under a quilt of bank-notes, anyhow." Uncle Bob was gathered to his fathers also, and left the bulk of his property to Augusta, so that Furlong had to regret his contemptible conduct in rejecting her hand. Augusta indulged in a spite to all mankind for the future. enjoying her dogs and her independence, and defying Hymen and hydrophobia for the rest of her life.

Gusty went on profiting by the early care of Edward O'Connor, whose friendship was ever his dearest possession; and Ratty, always wild, expressed a desire for leading a life of enterprise. As they are both "Irish heirs," as Lord Scatterbrain, and heirs under very different circumstances, it is not improbable that in our future "accounts" something may yet be heard of them, and the gratefu' author once more meet his kind readers.

[THE END.]

Moods and Tenses of Life. - In the days when Lindley Murray was a terror, and his pages a mystery, why didn't "the master hint that we should never be done with the moods and tenses until we were done with time?" That the world is full of them? How like quarter-horses we plunged through the verb "love." "I love, loved, have loved, had loved, shall or will love, shall have loved." On we darted through the "cans coulds and mights of the potential, the mysterious contingencies of the subjunctive, and so on, till we brought up the rear of this mysterious cavalcade of deeds in the great action of "loving."

For the sturdy "present tense," full of facts and figures, knocks and knowledges, we must look among the diggers and workers of the world: for the bright "future," full of beating heads and merry tongues, we must look in the swarming schools, or examine small bundles of white dimity They who wear the livery of time, who linger tremblingly amid the din of life-they are the melancholy "past!"

Before the memory becomes the cemetery of the soul, "I am" is as beautiful as an old ballad.

"The battle is done, the harp unstrung, Its music trembling, dying," Then "I shall be," is a sublime prophecy!

BEADLE'S HALF-MINE

Every one of them "Live" Stories by "Live" Authors. Each number a Complete Novel, at the extraordinary price of a HALF-DIME.

Dendwood Dick, THE PRINCE OF THE ROAD. By Edward L. Wheeler. Yellowstone Jack: or, THE TRAPPER OF THE ENCHANTED GROUND. By J. E. Badger, Jr. Kansas King; or, THE RED RIGHT HAND. By Bunfalo Bill (Hon. Wm. F. Cody). The Wild-Horse Hunters. By Capt. Mayne Reid and Capt. Frederick Whittaker. Vagabond Joe: THE YOUNG WANDER-ING JEW. By Oll Coomes. Bill Biddon, Trapper; or, LIFE IN THE NORTHWEST. By Edward S. Ellis. The Flying Yankee; or, THE OCEAN OUTCAST. By Col. Prentiss Ingraham. Seth Jones; or, THE CAPTIVES OF THE FRONTIER. By Edward S. Ellis. The Adventures of Baron Munchausen. Nat Todd: or, THE FATE OF THE STOUX CAPTIVE. By Edward S. Ellis. The Two Detectives; or, THE FORTUNES OF A BOWERY GIRL, A. W. Aiken. 12 Gulliver's Travels. A Voyage to Lilliput, and a Voyage to Brobdingnag. The Dumb Spy. By Oll Coomes, author of "Vagabond Joe," etc. Aladdin; or, THE WONDERFUL The Sea-Cat: or, THE WITCH OF DARIEM. By Capt. Frederick Whittaker. Robinson Crusoe. His Life and Surprising Adventures, (27 illustrations.) Ralph Roy, The Boy Buccaneer. By Col. Prentiss Ingraham. Sindbad the Sailor. His seven voyages. From the Arabian Nights. The Phantom Spy; or, THE PILOT OF THE PRAIRIE. By Buffalo Bill. The Double Daggers; or, DEAD-WOOD DICK'S DEFLANCE. By E. L. Wheeler, Frontier Angel. A Romance of 01 Kentucky Rangers' Life. By E. S. Ellis. ()() The Sea Serpent; or, THE BOY Robinson Cruson. By Col. Juan Lewis. Nick o' the Night; or, THE BOY SPY OF '76. By T. C. Harbaugh. Diamond Dirk; or, THE MYSTERY OF THE YELLOWSTONE. By Col. Ingraham. The Boy Captain; or, THE PIRATE'S DAUGHTER. By Roger Starbuck. 26 Cloven Hoof, the Demon. By Edward L. Wheeler. Edward L. Wheeler. Antelope Abe, the Boy Guide. By Oll Coome.s Buffalo Ben; or, DEADWOOD DICK IN DISGUISE. By Edward L. Wheeler. The Dumb Page; OR, THE DOGE'S DAUGHTER. By Capt. F. Whittaker. Roaring Ralph Rockwood, THE RECKLESS RANGER, By Harry St. George. 31 Keen-Knife, THE TR. PRAIRIES. By Oll Coomes. Keen-Knife, THE PRINCE OF THE (26) Bob Woolf, the Border Rufflan; OR or, THE GIRL DEAD-SHOT. E. L. Wheeler. The Ocean Bloodhound; or, THE RED PIRATES OF THE CARIBBERS, S. W. Pierce. Oregon Sol; or, NICK WHIFFLES' BOY SPY. By Capt. J. F. C. Adams. Wild Ivan, THE BOY CLAUDE DUVAL; By Edward L. Wheeler. The Boy Clown; or, THE QUEEN OF THE ARENA. By Frank S. Finn. The Hidden Lodge; or, THE LITTLE HUNTER OF THE ADIRONDACES. Harbaugh, Ned Wylde, THE BOY SCOUT. By Texas Jack. Death-Face, the Detective. By Edward L. Wheeler. Roving Ben. A story of a Young American. By John J. Marshall. Lasso Jack, THE YOUNG MUSTANG-ER. By Oll Coomes. The Phantom Miner; or, DEAD-WOOD DICK'S BONANZA. By Ed. L. Wheeler. Dick Darling, the Pony Express Rider. By Capt. F. Whittaker. Rattling Rube: or, THE NIGHT-MAWKS OF KENTUCKY. By Harry St. George. Old Avalanche, the Great Annihilator. By Edward L. Wheeler. 46 Glass Eye, the Great Shot of the West. By Capt. J. F. C. Adams. Nightingale Nat; OR, THE FOREST CAPTAINS. By T. C. Harbaugh. 48 Black John, the Road-Agent. By Jos. E. Badger, Jr. Omaha Oll; or, DEADWOOD DICK IN DANGER By Edward L. Wheeler.

Burt Bunker, THE TRAPPER A Tale of the Northwest. By C. E. Lasalle. The Boy Rifles; or, THE UNDER-GROUND CAMP. By Archie C. Iron. 52 The White Buffalo. A Tale of Strauge Adventure. Charles E Legalle Strauge Adventure. Charles E. Lasalle. Jim Bludsoe, Jr., THE BOY PHENIX; or, THROUGH TO THE DEATH. E. L. Wheeler. Ned Hazel, THE BOY TRAPPER; or, THE PHANTON PRINCESS. By J. F. C. Adams. Deadly-Eye, THE UNKNOWN SCOUT; By Buffalo Bill. 56 Nick Whittles' Pet; or, IN THE VALLEY OF DEATH. Capt. J. F. C. Adams. Deadwood Dick's Eagles; or, THE PARDS OF FLOOD BAR. E. L. Wheeler. The Border King; or, THE SECRET FOE. By Oll Coomes. Old Hickory, or, PANDY ELLIS'S SCALP. By Harry St. George. CO The White Indian; or, THE SCOUT OF THE YELLOWSTONE. By J. F. C. Adams. Buckhorn Bill; or, THE RED RIFLE TEAM. By Edward L. Wheeler. 62 The Shadow Ship; or, THE RIVAL LIEUTENANTS. By Col. Prentiss Ingraham. LIEUTENANTS. By Col. Prentiss Ingraham. The Red Brotherhood; or, THE TWELVE AVENGERS. By W. J. Hamilton. Dandy Jack; or, THE OUTLAW OF THE OREGON TRAIL. By T. C. Harbaugh. 65 Hurricane Bill; or, MUSTANG SAM AND HIS "PARD." By Jos. E. Badger, Jr. Single Hand; or, A LIFE FOR A LIFE. By W. J. Hamilton. Patent-Leather Joe; or, OLD RAT-TLESNAKE, THE CHARMER. By P. S. Warne. The Border Robin Hood; or, THE PRAIRIE ROVER. By Buffalo Bill. Gold Rifle; or, THE BOY DETECTIVE OF THE BLACK RANCH. By E. L. Wheeler. Old Zip's Cabin; or, THE GREEN-HORN IN THE WOODS. By J. F. C. Adams. Delaware Dick; THE Young RAN-GER SPY. By Oll Coomes. Mad Tom Western, THE TEXAN RANGER. By W. J. Hamilton. Deadwood Dick on Deck. Edward L. Wheeler, TRAPPER RANGER. By Oll Coomes. TRAPPER RANGER, By Oll Coomes. 75 The Boy Duelist; or, THE CRUISE OF THE SEA WOLF. By Col. P. Ingraham. 76 Abe Colt, the Crow-Killer. By Albert W. Aiken. TY Corduroy Charlie; or, THE LAST ACT OF DEADWOOD DICK. By E. L. Wheeler. 78 Blue Dick; or, THE YELLOW CHIEF'S VENGEANCE. By Captain Mayne Reid. VENGEANCE. By Captain Mayne Reid. 79 Sol Ginger, THE GIANT TRAPPER. By Albert W. Aiken. 80 Rosebud Rob; or, NUGGET NED, THE KNIGHT OF THE GULCH. By E. L. Wheeler. KNIGHT OF THE GULCH. By E. L. Wheeler. Lightning Jo, THE TERROR OF THE PRAIRIE. By Captain J. F. C. Adams. 82 Kit Harefoot, THE WOOD-HAWK; or, OLD POWDER-FACE. By T. C. Harbaugh. Rollo, the Boy Ranger; or, THE HEIRESS OF THE GOLDEN HORN. Oll Coomes. Idyl, the Girl Miner; or, ROSEBUD ROB ON HAND. By Edward L. Wheeler. Buck Buckram; OR, BESS, THE FE-MALE TRAPPER. By Capt. J. F. C. Adams. Dandy Rock, THE-MAN-FROM-TEX-AS. By G. Waldo Browne. 87 The Land Pirates; OR, THE LEAGUE OF DEVIL'S ISLAND. By Capt, Mayne Reid. 88 Photograph Phil; OR, ROSEBUD ROB'S REAPPEARANCE. By Ed. L. Wheeler. Island Jim; OR, THE PET OF THE FAMILY. By author of "Jack Harkaway." The Dread Kider; OR, THE TEXAN DUELIST. By George W. Browne. The Captain of the Club. By Bracebridge Hemyng, (Jack Harkaway,) 92 Canada Chet: or, OLD ANACONDA IN SITTING BULL'S CAMP. By E. L. Wheeler IN SITTING BULL'S CAMP. By E. L. Wheeler The Boy Miners; or, THE ENCHANTED ISLAND. By Edward S. Ellis. Midnight Jack, THE ROAD-AGENT By T. C. Harbaugh. The Rival Rovers. By Lieutenant Col. Hazeltine. Watch - Eye, THE DETECTIVE. By Edward L. Wheeler. The Outlaw Brothers; or, THE CAPTIVE OF THE HARPES. By J. J. Marshall. 98 Robin Hood, THE OUTLAWED BARL.
By Prof. Stewart Gildersteeve By Prof. Stewart Gildersteeve.

The Tiger of Taos. By George Waldo Browne. Deadwood Dick in Leadville. By Edward L. Wheeler. Jack Harkaway in New York. By Bracebridge Hemyng. Dick Dead-Eye, THE BOX SMUG-GLER. By Col. Prentiss Ingraham. The Lion of the Sea. By Col. Delle Sara. Deadwood Dick's Device. By Edward L. Wheeler. Old Rube, THE HUNTER; or, THE CROW CAPTIVE, By Capt. H. Holmes. Old Frosty, the Guide. By T. C. Harbaugh, One-Eyed Sim; or, THE ABAN-DONED FOREST HOME. By J. L. Bowen. Daring Davy, THE YOUNG BEAR KILLER. By Harry St. George. 109 Deadwood Dick as Detective.

By Edward L. Wheeler. By Edward L. Wheeler. The Black Steed of the Prairies. By James L. Bowen. The Sea-Devil; or, THE MIDSHIP MAN'S LEGACY. By Col. P. Ingraham. 112 The Mad Hunter; or, THE CAVE OF DEATH. By Burton Saxe. Jack Hoyle, THE YOUNG SPECU LATOR. By Edward L. Wheeler. The Black Schooner. By Rogen STARBUCK. The Mad Miner. By GRURGE WALDO BROWNE The Hussar Captain. By Con. PRENTISS INGRAHAM. Gilt-Edged Dick, THE SPORT-DE TECTIVE. By Edward L. Wheeler. Will Somers, THE BOY DETEC TIVE. By Charles Morris. Mustang Sam; or, THE KING OF THE PLAINS. By Jos. E. Badger, Jr. The Branded Hand; or, THE MAN OF MYSTERY. By Frank Dumont. Cinnamon Chip, THE GIRL SPORT By Edward L. Wheeler. 1 100 Phil Hardy, The Boss Boy By Charles Morris. Riowa Charley, THE WHITE MUS TANGER, By T. C. Harbaugh. 124 Tippy, the Texas, Champion. By Geo. Gleason. Tippy, the Texan; or, THE YOUR. 125 Bonanza Bill, Miner; or, MA DAM MYSTERY, THE FEMALE FORGER By Ed. L. Wheeler. 126 Picayune Pete; or, Nicodemus, THE DOG DETECTIVE. By Chas. Morris Wild-Fire, THE Boss OF THE ROAD; OR, THE WOLVES OF SATAN & GAP. By Frank Dumont, 1 OR The Young Privateer; OR, THE TAO PIRATES' STRONGHOLD. By Harry Cavendish. Deadwood Dick's Double. A TAU Story of Wild-Cat City. By Edward L. Wheeler. Detective Dick; or, THE HERO DE RAGS. By Charles Mords. The Golden Hand; or, DANDY ROCK TO THE RESCUE. G. W. Browne. 1 20 The Hunted Hunter; or, THY STRANGE HORSEMAN OF THE PRAIRIE By Edward S. Ellis. 1 22 Boss Bob, THE KING OF THE BOOTBLACKS: OF, THE METROPOLITAN SPOTTER. By Edward L. Wheeler. Sure Shot Seth, THE BOY RIFLE MAN. By Oll Coomes. Ready Feb. 17 135 Captain Paul, TEE MOONSHINED OF KENTUCKY. By C. D. Clark. Ready February 24th 136 Night-Hawk Kit; or, THE DAUGH-TER OF THE RANCHE. By Joseph E. Badger, Jr. Ready March 2d. 137 Blonde Bill, THE KING OF THE MINES. A Tale of the Los Animas Mines. By Edward L. Wheeler. Ready March 9th. A new issue every week. The Half-Dime Library is for sale by all Newsdealers, five cents per copy, or sent by mail on receipt of six cents each. BEADLE & ADAMS Publishers, 98 William Street, New York.

32 Large Three-Column Pages.

Each Number Complete. Price 10 cts.

1. A Hard Crowd; OF, GENTLEMAN SAM'S SISTER. By Philip S. Warne.

2. The Dare-Devil: OR, THE WINGED WITCH OF THE SEA. By Col. Prentiss Ingraham.

3. Kit Carson, Jr., THE CRACK SHOT OF THE WEST. By Buckskin Sam.

4. The Kidnapper; OR, THE GREAT SHANGHAI OF THE NORTHWEST. By Philip S. Warne. 5. The Fire-Fiends; OR, HERCULES, THE story of Texas. By Capt. Mayne Reid.

HUNCHBACK. By A. P. Morris. 6. Wildcat Bob, THE Boss BRUISER;

DR, THE BORDER BLOODHOUNDS. By Edward L. Wheeler, author of "Deadwood Dick," "Double Daggers." 7. Death-Notch, THE DESTROYER; OR,

THE SPIRIT LAKE AVENGERS. By Oll Coomes. 8. The Headless Horseman, Astrange

9. Handy Andy. By Samuel Lover. 10. Vidocq, THE FRENCH POLICE SPY. Written by himself.

11. Midshipman Easy. By Capt. Marryat.

12. The Death-Shot: OR, TRACKED TO DEATH. By Capt. Mayne Reid.

13. Pathaway; OR, NICK WHIFFLES, THE OLD TRAPPER OF THE NORTHWEST. By Dr. J. H. Robason.

14. Thayendanegea, THE SCOURGE; IR, THE WAR-EAGLE OF THE MOHAWKS. By Ned Buntae. author of "The White Wizard."

15. The Tiger-Slayer; OR, EAGLE-YEAD TO THE RESCUE. By Gustave Aimard.

16. The White Wizard; OR, THE GREAT PROPHET OF THE SEMINOLES. By Ned Buntline.

17. Nightshade, THE ROBBER PRINCE or Hounslow Heath. By Dr. J. H. Robinson.

18. The Sea Bandit; OR, THE QUEEN DF THE ISLE. By Ned Buntline.

19. Red Cedar, THE PRAIRIE OUTLAW. By Gustave Aimard. 20. The Bandit at Bay; OR, THE PI-

RATES OF THE PRAIRIES. By Gustave Aimard, 21. The Trapper's Daughter; OR,

THE OUTLAW'S FATE. By Gustave Almard. 22. Whitelaw: OR, NATTIE OF THE LAKE

SHORE. By Dr. J. H. Robinson. 23. The Red Warrior; OR, STELLA

DELORME'S COMANCHE LOVER. By Ned Buntline.

24. Prairie Flower. By Gustave Aimard, author of "Tiger-Slayer," etc.

25. The Gold-Guide: OR, STEEL ARM, THE REGULATOR. By Francis Johnson.

26. The Death-Track: OR, THE OUT-LAWS OF THE MOUNTAIN. By Francis Johnson.

27. The Spotter-Detective: OR, THE GIRLS OF NEW YORK. By Albert W. Aiken.

28. Three-Fingered Jack, THE ROAD-AGENT OF THE ROCKIES; OR, THE BOY MINER OF HARD Luck. By Joseph E. Badger, Jr.

29. Tiger Dick, THE FARO KING; or, THE CASHIER'S CRIME. By Philip S. Warne.

30. Gospel George; or, FIERY FRED, THE OUTLAW. By Joseph E. Badger, Jr.

31. The New York 'Sharp;' OR, THE

FLASH OF LIGHTNING. By Albert W. Aiken. 32. B'hoys of Yale; OR, THE SCRAPES

OF A HARD SET OF COLLEGIANS. By John D. Vose. 33. Overland Kit. By Albert W. Aiken.

34. Rocky Mountain Rob. By Albert W. Aiken.

35. Kentuck, the Sport. By Albert W. Aiken.

36. Injun Dick. By Albert W. Aiken.

37. Hirl, the Hunchback; OR, THE SWORDMAKER OF THE SANTEE. By Dr. J. H. Robinson. OUTLAW OF ARKANSAS. By Albert W. Aiken.

38. Velvet Hand: OR, THE IRON GRIP OF Injun Dick. By Albert W. Aiken.

39. The Russian Spy: OR, THE BROTH-ERS OF THE STARRY CROSS. By Frederick Whittaker.

40. The Long Haired 'Pards;' OR, THE TARTARS OF THE PLAINS. By Jos. E. Badger, Jr.

41. Gold Dan; OR, THE WHITE SAVAGE OF THE GREAT SALT LAKE. By Albert W. Aiken.

42. The California Detective: OR, THE WITCHES OF NEW YORK. By Albert W. Aiken.

43. Dakota Dan, THE RECKLESS RANGER; or, The Bee-Hunters' Excursion. By Oll Coomes.

44. Old Dan Rackback, THE GREAT EXTARMINATOR; OF, THE TRIANGLE'S LAST TRAIL. By Oll Coomes.

45. Old Bull's Eye, THE LIGHTNING SHOT OF THE PLAINS. By Joseph E. Badger, Jr.

46. Bowie-Knife Ben, THE LITTLE HUNTER OF THE NOR'-WEST. By Oll Coomes.

47. Pacific Pete, THE PRINCE OF THE REVOLVER. By Jos. E. Badger, Jr.

48. Idaho Tom, THE YOUNG OUTLAW OF SILVERLAND. By Oll Coomes.

KIT CARSON, JR.-No. 3.

49. The Wolf Demon; or, THE QUEEN OF THE KANAWHA. By Albert W. Aiken.

50. Jack Rabbit. THE PRAIRIE SPORT; or, THE CHILDREN OF THE LLANO ESTACADO. By Jos. E. Badger, Jr.

51. Red Rob. THE BOY ROAD-AGENT. By Oll Coomes.

52. Death Trailer, THE CHIEF OF Scours; or, Life and Love in a Frontier Fort. By Hon. Wm. F. Cody, (Buffalo Bill.)

53. Silver Sam: or, THE MYSTERY OF Deadwood Crry. By Col. Delle Sara.

54. Always on Hand; or. THE SPORTIVE SPORT OF THE FOOT HILLS. By Philip S. Warne, author of "A Hard Crowd," "Patent Leather Joe."

55. The Scalp Hunters. A ROMANCE OF THE PLAINS. By Capt. Mayne Reid.

56. The Indian Mazeppa; or, THE MAD MAN OF THE PLAINS. By Albert W. Aiken.

57. The Silent Hunter; or, THE SCOWL HALL MYSTERY. By Percy B. St. John.

58. Silver Knife; or, WICKLIFFE, THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN RANGER. By Dr. J. H. Robinson.

59. The Man From Texas; or, THE

60. Wide Awake; or, THE IDIOT (1) THE BLACK HILLS. By Frank Dumont, 61. Captain Seawaif, THE PRIVATEER. By Ned Buntline.

62. Loyal Heart; or, THE TRAPPERS OF ARKANSAS. By Gustave Aimard.

63. The Winged Whale. By Albert W. Aiken.

64. Double-Sight, the Death Shot. By Joseph E. Badger, Jr.

65. The Red Rajah; or, THE SCOURGE

OF THE INDIES. By Captain Frederick Whittaker. 66. The Specter Barque. A TALE

OF THE PACIFIC. By Captain Mayne Reid. 67. The Boy Jockey; or, Honesty

VERSUS CROOKEDNESS. By Joseph E. Badger, Jr. 68. The Fighting Trapper; or, KIT

CARSON TO THE RESCUE. By Capt. J. F. C. Adams, 69. The Irish Captain; A TALE OF FONTENOY. By Captain Frederick Whittaker. 70. Hydrabad, THE STRANGLER; or, ALETHE, THE CHILD OF THE CORD. By Dr. J. H.

Robinson.

71. Captain Cool-Blade, or, THE MAN SHARE OF THE MISSISSIPPI. By Jos. E. Badger, Jr.

72. The Phantom Hand. A STORY OF NEW YORK HEARTHS AND HOMES. By Albert VI Aiken.

73. The Knight of the Red Cross or, THE MAGICIAN OF GRANADA. A Tale of the Al hambra. By Dr. J. H. Robinson.

74. Captain of the Rifles. A ROMANCY OF THE MEXICAN VALLEY. By Captain Mayne Reil

75. Gentleman George: or. PARLOV PRISON, STAGE AND STREET. By Albert W. Aike-

76. The Queen's Musketeer, a THISBE, THE PRINCESS PALMIST. By George Albony

77. The Fresh of Frisco, or, THE REIRESS OF BUENAVENTURA. By Albert W. Aiken.

78. The Mysterious Spy; or, Golden FEATHER, THE BUCCANEER'S DAUGHTER. By A. N. Grainger.

79. Joe Phenix, THE POLICE SPY. By Albert W. Aiken.

80. A Man of Nerve; or, CALIBAN, THE DWARF. By Philip & Warne.

81. The Human Tiger; or, A HEART of FIRE. By Albert W. Aiken.

82. Iron Wrist, the Swordmaster. By Col. Thomas H. Monstery. 83. Gold Bullet Sport; or, THE KNIGHT

OF THE OVERLAND. By Buffalo Bill. 84. Hunted Down: or, THE WHITE

WITCH. By Albert W. Aiken. 85. The Cretan Rover; or, Zuleikan,

THE BEAUTIFUL. By Col. Prentice Ingraham. 86. The Big Hunter; or, THE QUEEN

OF THE WOODS. By the author of "Silent Hunter." 87. The Scarlet Captain; or, THY PRISONER OF THE TOWER. By Col. Delle Sara.

88. Big George, THE GIANT OF THE GULCH; Or, THE FIVE OUTLAW BROTHERS. By Joseph

E. Badger, Jr. Ready February 25th. 89. The Pirate Prince; or, PRETTY NELLY, THE QUEEN OF THE ISLE. By Col. Prentist Ingraham. Ready March 10th.

90. Will, THE MAD RANCHER or, THE TELRIBLE TEXAN. By Buckskin Sam. Ready March 24th

A new issue every two weeks.

Beadle's Dime Library is for sale by a Newsdealers, ten cents per copy, or sent by mail on receipt of twelve cents each. BEADLE & ADAMS. Publishers, 98 William Street, New York.